My Ex-Wife and Kids Came In Like A Wrecking Ball Chapter 1579- Little Lady Prepared Breakfast

It was another pleasurable night for the couple.

The following day, Rosalie felt her body was going to fall apart. She even reconsidered sleeping in the guest room instead.

“Does it hurt?”

Byron came in from outside and looked at her with concern.

Rosalie was embarrassed as she uttered each word through her teeth, “Thanks to you, yes.”

Byron chuckled and sat beside her. He massaged Rosalie’s back but did not plan to apologize for what he had done.

“Have some more rest. Estie prepared breakfast today for you, and she might be here anytime now.”

Rosalie was startled upon hearing this. She feared her daughter might see her like this and wanted to get off the bed to get dressed while enduring her pain.

“Mommy!”

Rosalie froze and happened to sprain her back. The pain made her frown.

“Mommy, what’s wrong?”

Estelle was anxious when she saw Rosalie’s expression. Subconsciously, she wanted to hug her mommy.

Just as she reached out her arms, her daddy stopped her. “Mommy sprained her back accidentally. Don’t hug her. Are you here to wake Mommy to have breakfast?”

Estelle nodded obediently.

Afraid Byron might utter nonsense if he continued, she quickly spoke, “Okay. Mommy will go to the dining area soon. Why don’t you go downstairs and wait for me?”

The little girl was worried as she looked at Rosalie’s back.

Rosalie glared at Byron before touching Estelle's head. "Mommy's fine. I sprained my back accidentally, but it's fine now."

Then, she even got off the bed and walked.

Estelle was relieved and headed out.

Looking at Estelle leaving, Rosalie's smile faded along with it.

She had not slept enough, yet that man did not control his desire...

Byron knew it was his fault and helped her get to the bathroom. However, his hands were still running over her body disobediently. In the end, Rosalie could take it no more and chased him out of the bathroom.

After spending some time getting dressed, they both headed downstairs.

Just as they entered the dining area, Rosalie saw the milk and sandwich on the table.

It was simple, but this was quite difficult for a five-year-old kid. i "Mrs. Lawrence, Little Lady prepared this for you. She learned how to make this for days. She was only satisfied with what she did today and finally served it."

Mrs. Zora was happy to see the family of five reunited.

Rosalie looked at Estelle upon hearing that.

The little girl's eyes were bright.

When Rosalie's eyes met Estelle's eyes, she saw anticipation. Thus, she took a bite of the sandwich and smiled at Estelle as she said, "It's tasty. Estie, you did a good job!" "Mommy, yours is tastier!"

Estelle's eyes brightened with joy upon hearing Rosalie's praise, and she spoke out what was in her mind without hesitation.

Listening to Estelle's praise, Rosalie chuckled.

"Why did you think of making Mommy breakfast?" Rosalie asked with a smile.

Estelle looked at her brothers and said apologetically, "I had this thought in mind long ago. We made you angry yesterday, Mommy. So..."

Lucian continued. "Mommy, we're sorry. We'll learn the skills from Daddy and never prank anyone anymore." i

Rosalie nodded. "It's good to hear you've realized your mistakes. Mommy believes that you all will get better. Soon, you might even be the best hackers in the world!"

Byron nodded in agreement. "They're indeed talented." i

My Ex-Wife and Kids Came In Like A Wrecking Ball Chapter 1580-After breakfast, Byron drove the three little ones to the kindergarten while Rosalie headed to the research institute.

"Dr. Jacobs, has Lancer Corporation not answered us yet?"

Linda waited before her office early in the morning.

Rosalie's steps froze upon hearing the name Lancer Corporation. She suppressed the emotion in her and said, "Maybe it will take some time for them to reply. Why? Is there any problem with the manufacturing factory?"

Linda looked helpless. "The last batch of medicinal materials finished yesterday. Now the production line is forced to stop. The person in charge even contacted me to discuss the temporary compensation for stopping the production."

She had not slept all night because of this matter.

Rosalie frowned and realized the matter was getting serious. She could not drag it on anymore.

"I know. How much do they want? You agree to their conditions first and I'll settle this matter as soon as possible."

Then, she strode back to her office.

Xander was the second person on her phone dial history.

Rosalie clenched her teeth and dialed his number.

However, the person on the other end of the call rejected it.

Then, a merciless message came in.

[Miss Jacobs, before you think about changing the price back to how it was, don't contact me. If you've already considered it, call my number again.]

Rosalie's heart sank upon seeing that message. She had no choice but to put the phone aside and pull up her list of contacts. She flipped through the pages of suppliers she had never contacted.

When she flipped through the contacts, she was pondering.

When she first met Xander, she had never thought the gentleman would become someone who only cared about benefits.

Their vision of this drug was already different, and Rosalie felt they might not be able to cooperate anymore.

Rosalie had realized the reality. Thus, she took her phone and dialed the number of the medicinal material suppliers.

However, after making a few calls, Rosalie failed to find a supplier she was satisfied with.

Linda's voice came from the door. "Dr. Jacobs, the factory wants us to pay 145,000 dollars in compensation."

Rosalie felt sorry for the money, but she could only agree to it for now.

Then, she put down the phone and headed out of the office. She said to Linda, "Contact all the research teams' leaders. Tell them to attend the meeting in the conference room now."

Linda agreed and contacted the leaders immediately.

Ten minutes later, every one of them arrived.

"I think you know the research institute is in trouble, and I'm sure you know about the details."

Rosalie looked at everyone seriously. Her voice sounded gentle but stern at the same time. "Does any of you have any suggestions for the new supplier?"

The leaders looked at each other.

Someone spoke out what was in their mind, "Dr. Jacobs, I don't understand why Lancer Corporation suddenly stopped supplying us with medicinal materials. Haven't we been cooperating well?"

Facing the doubt, Rosalie looked troubled but chose to be frank. "Our vision is different from Lancer Corporation, and it broke the cooperation. Now, we have to get a new medical material supplier."

Everyone looked at each other, and their doubtful gazes focused on Rosalie.

My Ex-Wife and Kids Came In Like A Wrecking Ball Chapter 1581-"According to what I know. Young Master Xander's motive to produce this drug is to give cancer patients hope to live. I don't think there's anything wrong with this."

Someone muttered and looked at Rosalie strangely.

The conference room was quiet, and Rosalie could hear every word he muttered.

"If anyone has any doubts about this matter, please state them. I'll try my best to explain and resolve the matter."

That man turned around and met Rosalie's gaze. He pondered before speaking, "Miss Jacobs, you were the only person who dealt with Young Master Xander about the project. We don't know what exactly happened."

Rosalie drooped her eyelids and said calmly, "I don't mind explaining if you all are eager to know about it."

Then, she lifted her head and looked at her staff. She was nervous deep down.

The price of the drug was what she had decided herself. She had never asked her colleagues' opinions.

Noticing Xander's difference, Rosalie did not want to see doctors taking patients' lives lightly.

Everyone stared at her, waiting for her explanation.

After a while, Rosalie spoke, "It's about the selling price of the drug. I want to set the price at 120 dollars, but Mr. Lancer wants to sell it for 300 dollars."

Everyone in the conference room was in deep thought.

Rosalie could see the dilemma in their expressions.

“Parson me, but I want to know why you want to sell it for 120 dollars,” after a while, someone spoke. He still doubted her.

Rosalie tried to remain calm and told them her intention, “If the price is lower, the patients will have the spending power to buy it. However, if we do this, we might suffer some losses for now, but the long-term profit is great. Moreover, it would bring fame to the research institute.”

In other words, she stood in the shoes of the patients and the research institute, yet Xander only cared about Lancer Corporation’s profit.

After speaking, Rosalie smiled at them and continued. “That’s my thought. If any of you aren’t happy with it, you can choose to leave. I won’t stop you, but please don’t leak the technology of this research institute.”

A long silence fell.

Rosalie’s hands clenched into fists, and she was worried.

“I agree with your thought.”

Someone expressed their attitude and specified that he supported Rosalie’s decision.

Rosalie’s eyes lit up with hope.

“We’ve been working in the research institute for years. Dr. Jacobs has always been doing things for the benefit of the research institute. Bringing the research institute to a higher level is also my hope.” “The price Mr. Lancer set is a little high.”

The others also expressed their thoughts.

Everyone supported Rosalie’s decision.

Rosalie was surprised and said, “Everyone... Thank you for your support and understanding.”

The employees had a close relationship with Xander before this, and she thought...

Everyone looked serious. “Dr. Jacobs, we have the same thought as you and hope the research institute can strive to be better.”

Rosalie smiled and brought back the main purpose of her having this meeting. “So, do any of you know any medicinal material supplier you could recommend?”

Everyone in the conference room had been in this field for years, and they would have a few connections.

Soon, they started discussing which supplier to approach.

My Ex-Wife and Kids Came In Like A Wrecking Ball Chapter 1582-After discussing the whole morning, they still did not get a solution.

“Lancer Corporation’s medicinal materials are of the best quality in the country. Getting a supply of medicinal materials of their grade won’t be easy. Moreover, the quantity needed is a lot, which will be challenging.”

One of the senior employees sighed.

If even he had no way, others would not have any either.

“If there’s nothing we can do, we can only give in and change the price to what Lancer Corporation wants.”

Someone was already expecting the worse.

Everyone in the conference room looked dejected.

Rosalie’s hope was crushed, and her heart sank, i

Since it was already time for the lunch break, Rosalie had to dismiss the meeting.

“Let’s end this meeting here. Please keep this matter concealed from other employees. Let’s keep this matter to ourselves first. Spreading the news might make others feel dejected too. I’ll think of some other way to solve this matter.”

Everyone agreed.

Rosalie thought of something and smiled. ‘The research institute’s atmosphere seems down lately. Why don’t you guys take your subordinates for lunch? It’s on me.’ 1

She wanted to ease the tense mood of the supervisors.

Everyone knew her intention and smiled.

Rosalie watched them leave. She did not have the mood to eat and sat in the conference room, dejected. All she wanted to do now was think of a way to solve this matter.

She even thought of calling her teacher.

Her teacher would be happy to hear she had invented a drug like this.

Moreover, her teacher had a high reputation in the field and probably knew some high-end medicinal material suppliers.

When she was about to call Quentin, Byron's call came in.

Rosalie adjusted her mood and answered the call.

"Have you taken your lunch?"

Byron's voice came from the other end of the call, easing her mind.

Rosalie felt graveness striking her when she heard his voice. "No, I've been in a meeting this morning and don't have the appetite..." "Come out. I'm outside the research institute."

Byron seemed to have expected this, and his voice sounded comforting.

Rosalie's eyes lit up in joy, and she headed out. "Why are you here? Aren't you at work?" "The president has to eat too."

Byron sounded helpless, yet he doted on her. "You were so tired last night, and I had to apologize. Otherwise, I'm afraid you might pack your things and sleep in the guest bedroom."

Rosalie's face flushed red upon thinking about what happened last night. She subconsciously looked around.

After ensuring no one was around, she was relieved and muttered, "Stop talking nonsense. I'll be at the entrance in a while."

Byron smiled and said nothing but did not hang up the call.

Rosalie had just walked out of the research institute and already saw the familiar Bentley. The window facing the research institute rolled down, and everyone who walked out of the research institute could see the man in the car.

It seemed Byron had seen her, and he hung up the call. Then, he got out of the car.

Rosalie approached him and got into the car as Byron had opened the door for her.

"What do you want to have for lunch?"

Byron entered the car through the driver's seat as he asked her.

When he spoke, he glanced at her.

All he saw was the same expression from yesterday on the woman's face again.

Apparently, the problem of Lancer Corporation had not been solved yet. It seemed the problem had worsened.

My Ex-Wife and Kids Came In Like A Wrecking Ball Chapter 1583-Rosalie had been thinking about the medicinal material supplier and did not hear Byron's question.

She only snapped out of her thoughts when the car moved. Then, she asked Byron, "Where are we going?"

Byron said, "I'm not sure what you want to eat. So let's go and have something light."

Rosalie nodded.

She did not have the mood to think about what to eat.

The car gradually pulled over in front of a restaurant.

Byron got out of the car and opened the door for Rosalie. Rosalie was still in a daze, and she looked worried. Her thoughts were written on her face. 1

The food was tasteless to her.

Rosalie had no appetite, and her mind was occupied with something else.

She had wanted to stop eating, but Byron persuaded her to eat, so she ate a little more.

"Is the cooperation between you and Lancer Corporation not going smoothly?"

After lunch, the two of them went back to the car. Byron asked in his deep voice.

Rosalie was startled and looked at the man before her, not knowing if she should tell him about it.

If she could, she wanted to solve this matter herself.

However, she would rely on this man before her if she was desperate.

Rosalie had no other way.

Just as she was hesitating, Byron's voice sounded.

"Xander couldn't accept your offered price, and your negotiation failed.

Now, Lancer Corporation refuses to cooperate with the research institute."

Byron sounded firm as if he had investigated them.

Rosalie looked at him, shocked. "How did you know?"

Byron sounded helpless. "There are only a few possible cooperation results, and I've been in the business field for years. I can guess the result from your expression."

Looking at Rosalie's bleak mood, he said calmly, "If I were Xander, I wouldn't accept the price either." "Is it really that low?" Rosalie doubted herself. "However, if it's higher..."

Byron did not appease her. Instead, he nodded frankly.

"To a businessman, if the profit is low, we can only see the return after a long investment period. It's not worth it."

Rosalie frowned. "However, the pharmaceutical industry exists to serve the patients. We should think of the patients' benefits before everything, right?"

Then, she said with a lack of confidence, "Maybe I was taking everything too simply?"

Byron looked at the woman before him and did not deny her thought.

Rosalie was indeed being too idealistic, especially when it was about business.

She had not placed herself in the position of a businessperson. She had been thinking on behalf of a medical researcher while she was in the business field.

With that, she would, of course, fail in her negotiation with Xander.

However, she had Byron, so she could be herself.

"My senior colleagues felt what I did was correct when discussing this in a meeting just now."

Rosalie looked at Byron with anticipation, hoping he would agree with her.

Byron did not deny it. "As a doctor and a researcher, you did nothing wrong. It's indeed a good deed."

What he meant was that Rosalie was still immature when she dealt with business.

After facing so many failures these two days, Rosalie started to doubt her ability, but Byron denied her thought.

"If it were you, what would you do? Would you increase the price like Xander suggested?"

Rosalie could not help herself from asking.
