My Ex-Wife and Kids Came In Like A Wrecking Ball Chapter 1842- Feel My Pain

Kelly was confident. She put on a smug and gloating expression.

“Rosalie would never have thought I asked someone to loosen her brake when she pulled over by the roadside and helped an old lady cross the road.”

That was even a road with a dysfunctional surveillance camera.

Kelly felt her plan was perfect.

Chloe was taken aback. She never expected this woman’s revenge plan to be so careful. It was a surprise that Kelly did not act rashly.

“So, what are the chances of me getting Byron?” Chloe still felt Byron and Rosalie were on good terms and would not break up again.

She had even heard the rumor that Melody had even cared for Rosalie personally when Rosalie was ill recently.

Moreover, Byron had already proposed to Rosalie officially. They were even about to get their wedding photos shot. They might even get officially married soon.

Kelly shrugged, but she looked confident. “Of course, you’ll stand a chance. Think about it. Why do you think Melody would use Rosalie’s car this time? Even if Melody doesn’t think much about this car crash, you can instigate her!”

Although the target of the car accident had become Melody, it was surprising that the incident did not hurt her much. That was quite disappointing to Kelly.

Back then, Kelly had lost everything gradually thanks to Melody. Thus, Kelly also planned to get back at Melody for what she did.

Now, Melody had even changed her mind and cared for Rosalie. In Kelly’s eyes, she was pathetic.

Chloe was startled. Finally, she understood Kelly’s intention.

Just as Rosalie and Byron entered the ward with the bouquet and fruit basket, she asked with concern, “Aunt Melody, how do you feel?” “She might’ve been discharged from the hospital if you had come a minute later,” Benedict chuckled and quipped.

However, Byron could not laugh at the joke. Although the car accident did not cause much injury, the hidden danger of this incident was far more serious than what it appeared to be on the surface.

"I'm fine, Rosie. Aren't you still feeling unwell? You didn't have to come all the way here." Melody was in a relaxed state.

After all, she had not experienced her family's concern in a long time.

If not because her injuries were not serious, she would like to stay in the hospital for another few days and enjoy it.

"Are you sure Aunt Melody can be discharged today?" Rosalie was still worried. After all, a concussion might also be a severe injury sometimes.

As a doctor, she habitually took the examination report by Melody's bed and started reading through it.

Then, she looked through each image on the brain CT imaging Melody had done.

"Rosie, I'm fine. The doctor has checked a few times. There's not even a single clot in my brain. It's all thanks to the airbag in your car. It reduced the impact of the collision in time.

After making sure Melody was fine, Rosalie was relieved.

Then, with Benedict's help, Melody got off the hospital bed. After changing her clothes and packing her bag, she took the bouquet and left the ward.

Byron had to rush to the traffic police department. Thus, he left Rosalie behind to escort his parents back home.

Rosalie agreed, yet Melody shook her head. "You're obviously still in pain.

You don't have to send US back. Benedict can drive."

In the end, Rosalie could only give in because Melody insisted.

After watching Byron's parents leave, Rosalie dialed Mary's number and asked Mary to pick her up.

When Mary heard Melody got into an accident, she was curious and wanted to know more about it. Thus, she agreed to pick Rosalie up.

After a while, Mary arrived, and Rosalie got into the car.

Kelly saw Rosalie's face through the window of the Mercedes Benz MPV. Anger burned in her, and her body trembled. Even her face was ashen.

"Rosalie, let's take this game slow! I'm not going to rush to take revenge on you. You'll feel my pain this time."
