My Ex-Wife and Kids Came In Like A Wrecking Ball Chapter 1908-Chapter 1908 Not A Coincidence

Petal Talk made an official announcement that Lucas would be their next CEO.

It was posted along with Lucas' photo. That instantly sparked the netizen's interest, and many fell for his appearance.

[Mr. Montgomery is so handsome!]

[Why would I stan a celebrity if there's such a handsome CEO?]

[I'll get some of Petal Talk's products to support Mr. CEO.]

As Lucas' resume was exposed online, many women left comments about him. The topic was a hit online, and things went out of their expectations.

It was out of Rosalie and Byron's expectation that giving Lucas the job as Petal Talk's CEO would make him a free ambassador for their brand.

However, they did not have much time to pay attention to this matter. After all, the wedding was around the corner.

Benedict and Melody were so busy. Lawrence Corporation had many sub-companies, and most of them were abroad. Many people were flying over to attend the wedding.

The connections Byron had accumulated all these years were countless.

He arranged for the hotels under his company to cancel their existing reservations for these few days to host the guests.

Most of the Coast City citizens also felt the change in the city.

However, Byron had told the media companies beforehand not to report about the wedding. That was why the wedding was a secret and no news about it was posted online.

That night, the husband and wife met the wedding planner to go through the wedding ceremony schedule tomorrow.

The wedding would be held in the manor they had just bought. The real estate company knew they would be holding a big event, so they built this place as quickly as possible and finally completed it in time.

When the couple was back in the manor, they were exhausted.

Melody suddenly rushed over and seemed anxious.

“Byron, Rosie, I have to tell you something urgently.” Melody hesitated to speak.

Rosalie looked at Byron, and Byron nodded. They were prepared to face any emergencies.

“Just now, Rosie’s father, Gordon, and stepmother, Violet, suddenly visited. They visited the Lawrence family’s mansion and looked for your father and me. We were shocked. Your father is stalling them now. I came to ask you guys what to do about them.”

Rosalie was startled.

The title of father and stepmother had long been lost in her life.

Back then, after Byron divorced her, Gordon’s angry face was horrendously distorted due to anger, and Violet even mocked her. Those memories flashed across Rosalie’s mind.

How dare they show themselves now?!

Instantly, Rosalie’s expression turned cold.

Byron understood Rosalie’s intention upon seeing her expression. He told his mother, “Try to stall them and send them to the hotel by telling them they’re invited guests. I’ll take care of everything later.”

Melody nodded and looked at Rosalie, who seemed reluctant. She knew how Byron would deal with it from Rosalie’s expression.

“Mom, you don’t have to be nice to them. After all, they’ve never taken me as their daughter. Just brush them off. It is better if they don’t attend the wedding.”

It was not a coincidence that they came. They chose to come a day before the wedding. It was apparent what they had in mind.

They were nothing to Rosalie. She felt they did not deserve to be treated nicely.

After Melody left, Byron hugged Rosalie and comforted her.

“You don’t need to care about them. Don’t let them ruin your mood,” he said sincerely.

Rosalie nodded but still felt uneasy.

The two of them came with malicious intentions. Rosalie feared they might request too much and make things difficult for the Lawrence family.

She said, “Byron, if my father mentions anything about giving him a betrothal gift, ignore him. They have no right to interfere in our marriage.”
