My Ex-Wife and Kids Came In Like A Wrecking Ball Chapter 1998-Rosalie talked about her past like a narrator in old movies.

Byron, as an exchange student, was overqualified. His responsibility was to go to an ordinary high school and find out the differences in teaching, including the school atmosphere and classroom order.

However, he was only 16 years old and did not care.

Probably because he thought regular high school classes were boring, he would skip classes and leave early.

One time, as usual, he had an arrangement with Andrius and Lucas to go to a commercial exhibition. So, he sneaked out of the classroom after the first period.

At that time, the school was so strict that security guards guarded several gates, and he had to climb over a wall beside the school library.

Unexpectedly, there were iron nails on the top of the wall. He hurt his hand, fell, and sprained his ankle, making him look pathetic.

Rosalie was a student with outstanding results and would stay in the library during recess periods.

That day, she was so absorbed in reading that she missed more than an hour of class. After realizing it, she hurried to the classroom.

Then, she met Byron.

Rosalie had never seen such a handsome man in her life.

She had never seen a man in such a distressed state either. Byron checked his legs and bleeding hand while in great pain.

“Hey, can I help you? What happened to your hand? We have to stop the bleeding and prevent it from getting infected!” Rosalie remembered what she said.

It was the first time in her life that she had spoken to Byron.

Byron nodded, and he looked at Rosalie. His gaze did not stop at her for long.

Rosalie reminded him not to move so much and headed back to the library to get a medical kit. It had all kinds of first aid materials.

So, with Rosalie's help, Byron's wound was sterilized, and the bleeding was stopped.

However, he sprained his ankle badly and hurt his tendon.

Byron would never have thought that a high school girl would be professional enough to fix the tendon of his calf back to its original position.

At that time, he deeply remembered the girl's profile and that strand of hair swaying with the breeze.

"Alright! It's better to get an anti-infection jab and not strain your leg for a week." Rosalie smiled and returned to the library to put the medical kit back in its place.

Byron thought Rosalie would return to him, but she went to class instead.

However, she remembered his features deeply. After all, he was handsome, and it was difficult to forget him.

After that incident, he would wait for her at the library but never saw her around.

One day, Byron skipped class and went to bury the wish bottles with Andrius.

When passing by the library, he met Rosalie again.

"What's your name?" he asked casually.

Rosalie noticed the empty wish bottle and asked, "Byron Lawrence, I know your identity. May I know what that is?"

She pointed at the wish bottle.

"You know me?" Byron smiled, making Rosalie shy and afraid to look at him.

She nodded. God knew how many times she had written his name on her notebook.

Knowing that he was an exchange student from the art institute, Rosalie knew that it was probably impossible to become friends with him in this life.

“This is a wish bottle. After writing down a wish, you bury them deep in the soil. Then, you dig it out years later to see if you’ve realized your wish! Unfortunately, I really don’t know what I should write!” Byron did not seem interested in it back then.

“Is that so? That’s a pity!” Rosalie tried to keep herself calm, but she was flustered even when he stood only a little closer to her.

“That’s right! How about this... Do you have a wish? Write down your wish in this bottle, and I’ll help you bury it! In the future, I’ll tell you where it is, and you can look for it. How about that?”

My Ex-Wife and Kids Came In Like A Wrecking Ball Chapter 1999-Byron did not look like he was joking.

Rosalie was startled. She did not expect he would say that.

At that time, her thoughts were simple back then. She had never thought of the possibility of someone taking it out to take a peek before burying it.

So, she nodded. Then, she rumpled through her things and tore a paper off her diary. Then, she folded it.

The pages of her diary were purple back then.

“Are you done?” Byron asked curiously.

Rosalie nodded. “Yes. That’s my wish. It’s long. I wonder if it’ll come true!”

“Well, put it in then!” A breeze blew as Byron approached.

His refreshing scent made her face flush red.

She carefully put the paper into the wish bottle.

Byron immediately stuffed the cork and smiled. "I will bury your wish now. The earth represents endless hope. I believe putting the wish on the earth would make it come true!"

In an instant, Rosalie froze.

She would never forget that scene.

That man tilted his head and smiled. He looked handsome and alluring.

In the sunlight, his features were so breathtaking.

Then, Byron left. The exchange student program ended, and he was never seen in her high school again.

They met when Rosalie was 15, and he had made her think about him all her life.

Rosalie did not even have the chance to ask him if he had buried the wish bottle for her.

He did not even know her name!

After that, when she was about to graduate from university, she was forced to marry Byron because her father traded her for a sum of money.

Rosalie thought Byron would recognize her.

However, he was cold toward her during their three years of marriage and never took her as his wife.

She chose him because of her crush on him when she was still an ignorant teenager. Having a baby by accident was something that happened after that.

Andrius and Mary could not snap out of their daze upon hearing Rosalie's story.

"So, Rosie, you've been in love with Byron since the age of 15?" Mary finally realized why Rosalie chose Byron.

No wonder even though Byron had hurt her feelings, she still loved him and was unwilling to give up.

Rosalie smiled and admitted it.

“After listening to the details, I think I can link them to my memories of those days. Byron did take a few days off after getting injured that year. Later, I felt that he had something on his mind, and the number of times he went to that ordinary high school was much more than before.”

Andrius recalled and was certain Rosalie had indeed met Byron that time.

“Rosalie, so you were the one who wrote this.” He handed the wish bottle to Rosalie.

The cork had come loose over the years. Rosalie easily loosened it and shook out the folded purple paper.

She opened it slowly, and Mary leaned over to look at it. She wanted to see what Rosalie had wished for back then.

Delicate and beautiful writing covered the paper. There were many wishes on it.

One of the biggest wishes she had written was, ‘I hope I can enter the same university as Byron.’

The following wishes were that she wanted to study medicine well, make a lot of money, and build a career for herself in the future.

A 15-year-old girl’s wishes were simple and straightforward, but she used all kinds of adjectives and fancy sentences.

Mary chuckled. “I never expected to see you writing in such fancy and beautiful language.”

Rosalie did not feel embarrassed. Instead, she said proudly, “Back then, many girls asked me to help them with their love letters.”

My Ex-Wife and Kids Came In Like A Wrecking Ball Chapter 2000-Chapter 2000 Not What He Expected

Byron returned home immediately after a short meeting at the company.

He had picked up courses. All the care knowledge for pregnant mothers was planted in his mind.

He was surprised to see Andrius and Mary at his manor.

“You just delivered supplements last night. What do you plan to give Rosie today?” Byron quipped.

However, Mary glared at him fiercely.

Even Andrius looked at him gloomily and with a hint of disdain.

Instead, Rosalie had a smile on her face.

She knew, of course, that after the two of them heard the story, they would be dissatisfied with how Byron had treated her in their marriage previously.

“Andrius, what’s going on? Talk to me!”

Mary’s gaze turned sharp and cold.

Byron felt a chill running down his spine. He began to recall what he had done that offended his wife.

“Byron, do you remember this wish bottle?”

Rosalie approached him with the wish bottle. As if something had struck her, she placed the purple paper back into the bottle after folding it.

Byron looked at it and soon recalled what it was.

“Isn’t this the wish bottle I gave you back then? Looks like Andrius dug it up. Were you all talking about what happened back then?” Byron looked at Mary tentatively.

Mary’s anger spiked when she saw Byron’s calm reaction. She retorted, “President Lawrence, let me ask you something. Since you knew Rosalie years ago, why did you treat her so badly when you married her back then?”

“Byron, you should’ve been able to recognize Rosalie when you married her. You should’ve recognized her as that high school girl you talked about!” Andrius remembered Byron mentioning an amazing girl he had met back then.

Now, Byron knew why they seemed displeased.

He looked at his wife.

Rosalie was still smiling. “I haven’t had the time to explain. So, why don’t you explain it yourself, Mr. Lawrence?”

Byron felt helpless. He had apologized to Rosalie about this matter a long time ago.

“In fact, the reason is very simple. I didn’t expect that a girl I once thought was lovely would end up marrying me for money. Now you can blame me all you want. But that’s exactly how I thought at the time. I blame my parents or perhaps even fate for all this. If the order of the matter could be adjusted, things wouldn’t have ended up like this!”

Back then, Byron had just taken over Lawrence Corporation and faced many schemes in the business world.

He found that a lot of business knowledge he had learned before was of no use at all.

Fortunately, he did not lose his footing. He reacted quickly and defeated the competitors. Then, he introduced the company to a promising industry and future.

Probably because of his career, he lost his trust in people.

At the same time, Rosalie became his wife by coincidence.

It was because they wanted to make his grandfather happy that his parents got him a wife. They even gave his wife’s father some money as a reward.

However, it turned out to be the beautiful girl he met when he was young.

That was not the change he was expecting from Rosalie.

A girl who was in the library every day should not have become such a woman. She even married a random man because of money.

Would she have married some other wealthy man if she did not marry him?

At that time, it was impossible for him to have any feelings for Rosalie, whom he thought had turned out to be someone like that.
