My Ex-Wife and Kids Came In Like A Wrecking Ball Chapter 2060-Byron took Rosalie to the entrance of the cemetery, so that she did not have to see the process of them digging up her mother's grave.

"Honey, don't worry. These officers are very professional. They just need some bones for the investigation. When they're done investigating, they'll place them back like how they were before. They won't go missing!" Byron comforted her.

Rosalie was not superstitious, but she had something in her mind.

"Hubby, can we move my mother's grave after the investigation? Although I don't think my dad deserves to be buried with my mom, my mom loved my dad all her life. That's why she had no regrets. In fact, if she had been willing to give up on him, her life might have turned out differently!"

Byron nodded. Moving the grave was fine. This cemetery was small, and it was far from the manor. It might be inconvenient for Rosalie to visit her.

After nearly three hours, Detective Carter walked over with a group of police officers.

They nodded at Byron and Rosalie. One of the officers said, "We're certain that Mrs. Lawrence's mother was poisoned before she died. Of course, we need to carry out tests to find out the component of the poison. It won't take long. Maybe a day or two!"

Detective Carter's forehead puckered. "Boys, work overtime and do the test within a day!"

The police officers nodded since Detective Carter had ordered them.

Detective Carter watched the police officers leave. Then, he followed Byron and Rosalie back to the car.

He concluded once they were in the car. "If I'm right, it's quicksilver poisoning!"

Quicksilver, commonly known as mercury, was the only liquid metal at normal temperature and pressure. Mercury could evaporate at room temperature. Mercury vapor and mercury compounds could be highly toxic.

Mercury could be found in thermometers. If one broke it accidentally, one had to be very careful of the toxins that come with the volatilization of mercury.

Rosalie froze upon hearing that.

She was a doctor. Moreover, she had dealt with this kind of mercury poisoning. Most of it started with a small amount of contamination, then the chronic suffering began.

It had a dangerous effect on all parts of the human body. The nervous, digestive, respiratory, and urinary system, as well as the skin, might gradually collapse as the toxin spread.

It would start from headaches, dizziness, insomnia, and irritability. At last, it would lead to organ failure. It would torture every part of the body.

A person with chronic mercury poisoning would experience all the pain the human body could experience.

Monstrous anger shot through Rosalie, and she shuddered, trying to suppress it.

She clenched her teeth as anger burned in her. "Violet, how dare you do something so vicious to my mother?! My mother bore the pain plaguing her body and was instead worried about me. She must've been in so much pain!"

The pain was worse than death!

Rosalie wanted to kill Violet for torturing her mother.

Her tears rolled down her cheeks.

Byron hugged his wife and tried to appease her.

The detective remained silent and said firmly. "Please rest assured. I'll help you find the evidence to arrest the murderer. I promise!"

When they returned to the manor, Rosalie could no longer remain calm. She wanted to dash out and poison Violet so that she would experience the same pain her mother suffered.

Luther returned with news about Violet. One of Luke's men had attracted Violet's attention with the high purchase price. They had arranged a date to negotiate the price.

To ensure everything would go well, Byron ordered Luther to arrange for more men to stand guard at all the exits of Coast City, ensuring Violet could not flee.

In the evening, the police called and confirmed it was mercury poisoning and chronic accumulation. The poisoning period was approximately three months.

The police were preparing an arrest warrant to arrest and interrogate the suspect.

My Ex-Wife and Kids Came In Like A Wrecking Ball Chapter 2061-Byron was really worried. His wife's mood swings in the past few days had been erratic. She was so angry that she collapsed, recovered after the collapse, then immediately collapsed again. He was worried that this repeated cycle would take a toll on her body.

While his wife waited for the news at home, he went to the police station in person to urge progress.

Fortunately, the arrest warrant was officially issued. Four police officers went to the suburban villa and soon brought Violet back to the police station.

At present, Violet could only be called a suspect. She was ordered to cooperate with the investigation.

She could only be detained for only 24 hours.

At the police station, there was a lack of fear on Violet's face. She had a smug sneer when she only saw Byron but not Rosalie.

“You can’t place any charges on me without any evidence. It’s pointless no matter how you investigate.”

Violet was so blatantly arrogant that even the police officers were a little irritated. They brought her into the interrogation room with a stern expression.

Byron was waiting at the door. Detective Carter came out looking solemn, shaking his head slightly.

“According to the detailed affirmative forensic report from the medical officer, Ms. Jacobs’ mother’s illness lasted for three years. In other words, she was forcefully exposed to mercury way before. A year after Mrs. Jacobs had her first health symptoms, Violet forced Gordon to divorce Mrs. Jacobs and marry her. If we speculate from the time of death, that was a full year between the two incidents”

Byron had a solemn expression following that statement. His brows furrowed as he began to think.

After a few seconds, he asked, “Perhaps Violet targeted my mother-in-law from the very beginning and secretly poisoned her behind the scenes?”

Detective Carter shook his head and denied it. “Ms. Jacobs mentioned her mother’s normal life trajectory yesterday. She was always at home with her husband and child. It was impossible for her to be wary of any woman. I’ve been wondering whether Gordon conspired with Violet to do this. On second thought, if Gordon was truly guilty, there was probably no reason for him to hide things till his death.

Byron believed that too.

What Gordon did before he died was indeed a gesture of repentance and guilt.

However, the suicide at the end remained elusive. Was he trying to help Violet conceal a secret?

The whole case became a complicated mystery. Where did Violet get the confidence behind her arrogance and fearlessness now?

Could it be that it was truly impossible to find a new breakthrough from the chain of evidence?

Detective Carter suddenly muttered to himself, "We'll have to get Ms. Jacobs to recall as many memories as possible. We need to know if her mother behaved abnormally back then."

Byron nodded. "Alright, Detective Carter. I'll go back first and talk to my wife more. Don't overwork yourself. Rest more if you can. Thank you very much for your help!"

"Don't worry, I'll see how these brats interrogate her. Maybe I can find something out of it." With that, Detective Carter waved at Byron and entered the police station again.

Back at the manor, Byron immediately saw his wife fidgeting in the living room.

Rosalie wanted to control her emotions and let her mind relax completely to get a good night's sleep.

However, she was plagued with the thoughts of her mother's suffering from being chronically poisoned even though she kept telling herself not to think about it for the time being.

What peace could there be in her heart?

As her husband entered the door, she hurried forward and asked eagerly, "How is it? Did the police find any clues?"

Byron organized his words in his mind. He truly did not want to see his wife depressed again. Thus, he smiled knowingly. "Violet has been arrested. She's being interrogated now."

Detective Carter is a veteran detective with a unique experience. He can break through a criminal's psychological defense at a critical moment. So, it depends on whether Violet is stubborn enough this time."
