Chapter 255 Behave Yourself

On the other side, Thalia followed Spencer out of the building and watched him leave in a car. Thus, she also hopped into a car and followed behind him.

Because Spencer drove at high speed, Thalia had to do the same to keep up. It was as though both of them were racing on the street.

As Spencer drove, he tried to avoid her. However, at the same time, he kept glancing at the vehicle behind him, as if he was afraid something was going to happen to Thalia.

As for Thalia herself, she just wanted to catch him and question him.

There's no way I'm letting him escape again! Bearing that thought in mind, she stepped on the gas pedal hard.

Seeing how she was chasing after him relentlessly, Spencer frowned with worry. When he saw a crossroads in front, he pretended to go straight forward. However, right as he was about to arrive, he drove in another direction.

Thalia almost fell for it, but she managed to halt the car's movement upon seeing his car turning in another direction. Her tires screeched loudly on the road before she swiftly changed direction and resumed following him.

The further his car went, the more secluded the road became.

Seeing that Spencer had no intention of stopping, Thalia thought of an idea. You're the one who forced me to do this, Spencer.

In the next second, she stepped on the gas pedal all the way to the bottom and crashed into the back of his car.

The man didn't expect that at all as his car shook. Glancing at the rearview mirror, he increased the vehicle's speed.

Since he had no intention of slowing down, she maintained her speed and continuously rammed into the back of his car.

"Sh*t!" Spencer cursed with worry and resignation.

He knew if he still couldn't shake Thalia off, she would probably do something crazy.

Sweeping his gaze past his surroundings, he spotted an alley. Hope flashed across his eyes as he drove in that alley's direction.

Just as he was getting close to that alley, a vehicle drove out from a dark path. Both he and that vehicle's owner didn't expect to see each other. The other vehicle was a truck, and the driver honked the horn violently in hopes of avoiding a crash. When Spencer saw that, he quickly changed direction and dodged the truck.

Scared out of his wits, the driver bellowed at Spencer, "Drive properly, man! What, you think you're above the law just because you drive a good car?"

Moments later, the driver heard a loud crash. Turning his head around, he noticed a car smashing into the side of the mountain.

He was stunned.

Spencer was about to leave, but upon hearing the sound, he felt his heartbeat increase violently.

Stopping the car, he looked outside with fear.

As the truck driver exited his vehicle, so did Spencer.

Without any hesitation, Spencer ran toward the wreck.

The truck just so happened to obscure the view of the crash. After he ran around the truck, he saw Thalia's car colliding with the mountain.

Smoke was still rising out of the car, and the front portion of the vehicle had been smashed into smithereens.

At that moment, he suddenly felt as though his body was drained of all energy.

"No!" He shook his head, his mind empty. The only thing filling his noggin was regret.

He sprinted to the car and tried to pry the door open, but it wouldn't budge.

Like a madman, Spencer shouted, "Wait for me, Thalia! I'll save you right now!"

Raising his head, he saw the driver standing at the side, so he roared, "Come and help me!"

The driver stared at the person standing behind him. "But the driver's not in the car..."

That stunned Spencer for a second before he realized something and turned around.

It was then he saw Thalia standing behind him. Blood could be seen on her forehead and arm. Apparently, she jumped out of the vehicle the moment the car crashed.

In other words, he got duped.

Thalia made a risky bet and won.

Hence, she stared at him with a smile. "I thought you didn't know me. Why are you panicking, then?"

A complicated feeling filled Spencer's heart as he stared at her. However, he couldn't keep it in and exploded with a roar, "Do you know what the hell you were doing!"

Neither anger nor fear was present in her heart when she gazed at him. "Of course I knew, but if I didn't do that, you wouldn't have stopped your car and talked to me."

"You're playing with your life!"

"Yeah, but it's worth it." Thalia's sparkling eyes were fixed on him.

His heart was thumping pretty hard. However, after hearing what she said, he forced himself to calm down.

Suppressing the rage in his heart, he stood and left without a word.

She immediately leaped forward and blocked his way. "You still want to run?"

"Move away!" Spencer uttered coldly.

"No!" the woman rebuked, determination filling her voice.

He stared at the stubborn woman's palm-sized face. After so many years, she has gotten more mature. Sure, she's no longer the innocent girl she used to be, but so what? A relationship between us is impossible!

Not wanting to look at her any longer, he averted his eyes away from her.

"How long do you plan to hide from me, Spencer?" Thalia's line of sight remained glued to him. "It has been so many years. Are you still not willing to believe me?"

As she stepped toward him, Spencer subconsciously backed away.

She wanted to grab him, but the moment she stretched her hand out, he held her arm.

A complicated look was present in his eyes as he stared at her. He then uttered in a small and cruel voice, "Behave yourself."

Pain flashed across her eyes, but she quickly smiled. "I haven't been behaving myself around you for a long time." Upon finishing her sentence, she leaned forward, stood on her toes, and pecked him on the lips.

It was as though lightning struck Spencer as he stared at her, flabbergasted.

She grinned at him satisfactorily. "So what if I don't behave myself? What are you going to do about it?"

There was insanity swirling in his dark eyes.

The more he kept his silence, the more she wanted to challenge and enrage him.

"I know you have feelings for me and care about me, Spencer, but why don't you want to admit it?" Thalia questioned.

"Who said I have feelings for you or that I care about you?"

"You were worried about me just a minute ago!"

"That's only because I see you as my little sister! Or maybe I'm just a normal person who cares about the well-being of another normal person. Hell, even if the one in danger were an animal, I'd still be worried about them and try to save them!" he uttered one word at a time.

That stunned her. "Little sister?"

"Yes!" Spencer confirmed cruelly.

Shaking her head, Thalia remarked, "I don't believe you!"

"It doesn't matter if you believe it because it is the truth!" The edge of his lips curved upward. "Besides, I already have someone I like!"

Hearing that, she was even more befuddled. "W-What did you say?"

His heart ached when he saw how hurt she looked. However, that feeling was gone in a flash as he continued, "Please stop troubling me, Thalia. Just let bygones be bygones and stop clinging to the past!"

She stared at him for a long while before her lips moved again. "You really have... someone you like?"
