Chapter 384

Chapter 384 Copycat?

Yvonne was enjoying the scene she had caused. Two of her staff stood by her side, holding robes similar to the ones the woman had purchased from Jenny's store.

The woman quickly compared her purchase with the ones shown. Her face fell when she realized they were nearly identical. She tossed a robe at Jade, demanding, "What is this? You expect me to wear a copycat's work?!"

She was an influential woman in Parrington, so wearing something like this would surely ruin her reputation.

Jade tucked the robe in her arms and glanced at the ones Yvonne's staff were holding. "We can guarantee there was no copyright infringement involved."

"No?" Yvonne sneered and walked up to Jenny. "How would you explain the similarity in our designs when we've been open for a week now?"

Jenny knew Yvonne was coming directly at her. All this copycat stuff must've been her idea too. She just had to figure out how Yvonne got her designs.

"I have the fashion drawing for this robe because I drew the design myself. Do you?"

Yvonne smiled, then held out a hand to her assistant. "Of course I do." She gave the paper to Jenny. "Take a long look and tell me whose design is original."

Jenny's eyes widened, staring at Yvonne's design in shock. The design was the exact same as hers, if not for the different paper material.

Jade was just as taken aback. She asked quietly, "What is going on, Jenny?"

"I don't know...I think someone stole my design and gave it to her." Not just her design-that person must also have seen the clothes after they had been finalized; otherwise, their designs wouldn't have been so similar,

Jenny suddenly caught onto something. Her eyes scanned the shop before landing on Felicity at the far corner.

The woman shivered and-before Jenny could call her out-immediately left the store.

How dare she?

Jenny had brought Felicity from the countryside to Parrington and let her stay at her own home, but this was what she repaid her with? Stealing her work for Yvonne?!

Clenching her fist, Jenny let out a deep breath to regain her composure. "You know full well how you got this design."

"Yes, our designer drew it herself." Yvonne sneered, thinking Jenny wouldn't be able to prove the truth.

Jenny had a few seconds of thought before taking out her phone. "I'll call the police then."

She wouldn't be able to prove her or her brand's innocence without the help of the police. It was the only way the public would believe in them again.

"You..." Yvonne gaped in surprise. Clearly, she didn't think Jenny would go down this route.

After making the call, Jenny announced to the customers in her shop, "Thank you so much for coming to our opening tonight, everyone. I'm afraid we will have to close for the night, given we've been accused of infringing others' copyright. But rest assured, once this matter is settled and we've proven our innocence, we will reopen with a bang."

"You really didn't copy their design?" the woman who had bought the robe asked.

Jenny shook her head. "Thank you for your support, ma'am. Don't worry-we'll refund you your money. Do catch up with the police for updates on this case."
