Chapter 395

Chapter 395 Apologies, Sir

Jenny came out from the surgery room exhausted.

“Here.” Christopher offered a bottle of water to her, but she didn’t take it.

“Why are you here?” she asked, thinking if the man couldn’t leave her alone for once.

“Just worried about you.” He smiled, following her to her office.

Jenny sat back in her chair, resting. “I’m fine. Nothing to worry about.”

“Are you sure you’re fine?” Christopher sat down opposite her. “You don’t need to act tough, you know.”

Jenny glared at him, too lazy to speak.

“Breakups are bound to hurt. But you know what they say, time and rebounds are the best way to make it through.” Christopher grinned. “So why don’t you reconsider being with me? I’m way better than Alec Faust, let me tell you that.”

Jenny wanted to hit him, but she held back. “How many times do I need to tell you? I don’t like Have you never taken me seriously?”

you.

She hadn’t been interested in Christopher once, and that wouldn’t change even if Alec weren’t in the picture.

“Things change, don’t they? Just because you weren’t interested before doesn’t mean you won’t ever be.” Christopher shrugged. There was no reason to give up now, especially when Jenny was single.

Jenny sighed and pinched her nose bridge.

“Are you okay? I can send you back if you need to rest,” Christopher quickly offered.

Jenny nodded. She just wanted to lay in bed right now. It didn’t matter who or what got her there.

She closed her eyes to rest the moment she got into Christopher’s car, the man staying silent in response. He wasn’t going to ruin things by rushing her.

They quickly left the hospital, oblivious to the car parked a way away from the entrance, its passengers silently watching things unfold.

Alec’s heart tightened painfully as he watched Jenny leave in Christopher’s car. The pain was so great he had to bend over, gently soothing himself.

Vincent panicked upon seeing him. “Are you alright, Mr. Faust?”

“I’m fine. Let’s go.” Alec forced himself to sit up.

“I will explain everything to Jenny after dealing with Mortimer,” he thought.

“Why don’t we get you a check-up, sir?” Vincent added, still worried. They were right outside the hospital, after all.

Alec gave him a cold glare, to which Vincent quickly started the car. “Apologies, sir. We’ll leave right away.”

Jenny had stepped out of Christopher’s car when he turned off his engine, seemingly intending to follow her upstairs. “Go home. I don’t have the energy to deal with you right now.”

“Alright.” Christopher nodded. “I ordered takeout for you, by the way. It should be delivered soon. Instant noodles aren’t good for you long term.”

Jenny waved a hand without looking back.

Behind her, Christopher smiled, feeling smug. “Progress!” he thought.

Jenny went upstairs to her condo, then noticed Yvonne standing outside. Her annoyance grew sharper in response.

“Hey~ How’s it feel to be dumped by Alec again? Can’t wait to leave Parrington with your tail between your legs, huh?” Yvonne said, walking up to her.
