Chapter 412 You Begged Me

Jenny had been performing surgeries for several days in a row before taking a leave of absence. She wanted to complete all her surgeries before her break.

Alec had also been busy recently. In the past few days, he had successfully persuaded several directors to support him. He now needed to unite everyone to remove Mortimer from his position as head director of the Faust Group. Once Mortimer was no longer in charge, he would have limited power and pose little threat to Jenny, so Alec could stop taking him seriously. However, he was oblivious to what Jenny was thinking at the time or that she was planning to go to Bardoff City.

In Jenny's office, she had completed all the necessary surgeries for her inpatients and asked for leave. She could leave for Bardoff City at any time. Before leaving, she thought of Stephanie, who she hadn't heard from recently, and became worried.

She called her, and Stephanie answered, "Jenny."

"Stephanie, what have you been up to lately?" Jenny asked. "You didn't even come to see me."

She found it strange that Stephanie only called her when she broke up with Alec. She hadn't even contacted her when the news of Alec and Natalia began to spread.

Stephanie stared at the man beside her in frustration, replying, "Let's meet another day. I'm busy today."

Jenny immediately became suspicious and asked, "Where are you? Are you with your family or at work? I'll head over now."

It caught Stephanie by surprise. "No thanks, I'm busy."

Jenny continued to press on, saying, "Stephanie, we've known each other for a long time. You can't fool me by saying that."

Stephanie was silent.

Jenny frowned. "Are you at Paul's place? Did he threaten you using your family?"

The thought of it made Jenny furious.

"No, I went to him voluntarily," Stephanie replied with a wry smile. Although she put up a good fight, she and her family couldn't beat Paul. If she didn't compromise, the Walkers would have been done for.

"Why didn't you tell me?" Jenny asked. "I can help you."

"You know, I still like him quite a bit." Stephanie didn't want Jenny to worry. She didn't know what Paul might do if she angered him. After all, Jenny had just broken up with Alec and was still sad over it, so Stephanie didn't want to add to her worries.

It only made Jenny angrier. "You need to leave immediately. I'll pick you up."

"Jenny..."

"Stephanie, if you still consider me a friend, listen to me." She didn't believe Paul wouldn't do anything to Stephanie. She couldn't afford to take any chances.

Jenny hung up and left the hospital to drive to Paul's villa.

Meanwhile, Stephanie stared helplessly at her phone.

"Is your best friend coming to save you?" Paul asked, holding a glass of red wine in his hand.

Seeing his wicked smile, Stephanie said coldly, "I won't go with her but don't do anything to her, or I'll make sure you regret it!"

"I'll regret it?" Paul seemed to find it amusing. "Well, you can go with her if you want."

It shut Stephanie right up. She knew she couldn't leave. If she did, Paul would attack her family.

"Let's set the record straight. It was you who begged to be my lover. I didn't force you," he said with a snort before heading upstairs.

Stephanie smiled wryly. Yes, she had begged him.
