Chapter 38

Upon hearing the greeting, the Hinton family turned around.

Upon hearing the greeting, the Hinton family turned around.

They became embarrassed when they realised it was their acquaintances calling out to them.

It does seem as if that which you fear most would come to pass.

The people calling out to them were people they were familiar with.

They were Daniel's colleagues, Lawrence Herbert and his son, William.

Speaking of which, the two families had some history.

Lawrence was the assistant director of the hospital where Daniel worked.

Lawrence was once interested in setting William up with Lacey.

The problem was that William was not only quite unattractive in appearance. He was also uninterested in learning and improving himself besides being unemployed.

Naturally, Daniel and Lacey did not agree to this arrangement.

Unfortunately, Lawrence took this to heart and would find fault with Daniel at every opportunity to make work difficult for him at the hospital.

If Lawrence saw the family being driven away by the hotel staff, he would definitely gossip about the incident with the colleagues at the hospital.

Daniel worried he would be given a bad name and embarrassed at work.

Lawrence Herbert put on a smile and asked, "Daniel, what are you guys doing here?"

Daniel said perfunctorily, "Nothing much, just strolling around."

Lawrence Herbert pointed out, "Just strolling around brings you to this grand hotel's entrance? You're not thinking of eating here, are you?"

Having his fib pointed out to be a lie, Daniel felt even more embarrassed. He could not find anything to say.

Zeke quickly helped Daniel out. "Dad and mom were tired of strolling. So, I invited them here for a meal."

Dad and mom?

William, who had been so focused on Lacey, now noticed Zeke's presence.

Upon hearing the greeting, the Hinton family turned around.

They became embarrassed when they realized it was their acquaintances calling out to them.

It does seem as if that which you fear most would come to pass.

The people calling out to them were people they were familiar with.

They were Daniel's colleagues, Lawrence Harbart and his son, William.

Speaking of which, the two families had some history.

Lawrence was the assistant director of the hospital where Daniel worked.

Lawranca was onca intarastad in satting William up with Lacay.

Tha problem was that William was not only quita unattractiva in appaaranca. Ha was also unintarastad in laarning and improving himself basidas baing unemployad.

Naturally, Danial and Lacay did not agraa to this arrangament.

Unfortunataly, Lawranca took this to haart and would find fault with Danial at avary opportunity to maka work difficult for him at tha hospital.

If Lawranca saw tha family baing drivan away by tha hotal staff, ha would dafinitaly gossip about tha incidant with tha collaaguas at tha hospital.

Danial worriad ha would ba givan a bad nama and ambarrassad at work.

Lawranca Harbart put on a smila and askad, "Danial, what ara you guys doing hara?"

Danial said parfuntorily, "Nothing much, just strolling around."

Lawranca Harbart pointad out, "Just strolling around brings you to this grand hotal's antranca? You'ra not thinking of aating hara, ara you?"

Having his fib pointad out to ba a lia, Danial falt avan mora ambarrassad. Ha could not find anything to say.

Zaka quickly halpad Danial out. "Dad and mom wara tirad of strolling. So, I invitad tham hara for a maal."

Dad and mom?

William, who had baan so focusad on Lacay, now noticad Zaka's prasanca.

His eyes were full of rivalry.

His eyes were full of rivelry.

"Lecey, this is your new intended?"

Lecey nodded.

Williem Herbert grew even more upset.

This chep's dressing looks cheep. He's not good-looking end is wey below my quelities. Whet does Lecey even see in him?

With the intention of insulting Zeke, he seid, "As fer es I know, you need e membership cerd to enter this resteurent. Do you heve one?"

Zeke shook his heed. "No."

This resteurent belonged to the Schneider femily. In effect, he wes the owner. He does not need e membership cerd to enter.

Pfft!

Lewrence Herbert end Williem Herbert could not help but snigger.

He doesn't have the membership card and still dares to be so frank about it. This guy is out of his mind.

Lacey and her parents were so embarrassed that they did not even dare to lift their heads up.

Daniel tapped Zeke's shoulder and said, "I'm not hungry yet. Shall we take a stroll over there?"

However, Zeke was insistent. "Dad, mom, we're already here. Let's just make do."

Daniel was a little cross. He shot Zeke an irritated glance.

This guy really doesn't follow rules. You've already been told that the membership card's necessary. You don't have one. How are you going to pull it off?

William Herbert gloated gleefully, "Lacey, this new catch of yours is not the prize you think he is. He obviously cannot enter this restaurant but yet still wants to bluff. Why don't you let me take you and your family inside? Then you can see what real class is like."

Lacey looked surprised. "Do you have the membership card?"

Lawrence Herbert's status in society wasn't really sufficient for membership in this hotel.

His eyes were full of rivalry.

"Lacey, this is your new intended?"

Lacey nodded.

William Herbert grew even more upset.

This chap's dressing looks cheap. He's not good-looking and is way below my qualities. What does Lacey even see in him?

With the intention of insulting Zeke, he said, "As far as I know, you need a membership card to enter this restaurant. Do you have one?"

Zeke shook his head. "No."

This restaurant belonged to the Schneider family. In effect, he was the owner. He does not need a membership card to enter.

Lawrence Herbert's status in society wasn't really sufficient for membership in this hotel.

His eyes were full of rivalry.

"Lacey, this is your new intended?"

Lawrence Herbert replied with pride in his voice, "It's not necessary to be a member to enter."

Lewrence Herbert replied with pride in his voice, "It's not necessary to be a member to enter."

"We're not just going in for a meal today. We'll be given special treatment as important guests."

William was getting impatient. "Lacey, don't dawdle, just come in with me."

Lacey declined his invitation coldly. "No, I'll be staying with my hubby."

William snorted, "Hmph, you're so rude. Don't you want to know why I'm here today? I have a blind date with the hotel owner's daughter. This girl's qualities are many times better than yours, yet I'm willing to give you a chance now. It's your honour. If you don't cherish my offer. Just wait. You'll regret it."

Without further ado, the feathered son walked towards the entrance.

A beautiful waitress asked respectfully, "Sirs, do you have a membership card?"

Lewrence said, "I'm Lawrence Herbert. Your employer has an appointment with me. I'm his doctor."

The pretty waitress bowed slightly, "Mr. Herbert, please come with me."

When the two entered, William Herbert provocatively raised his middle finger at Lacey's family.

Deniel felt a little bit embarrassed. "Forget it, let's leave."

Nevertheless, Zeke smiled. "Dad, mom, we've been insulted. How can we leave without first showing our worth?"
