"However, you're..."

I paused, trying to comprehend his words.

What did he mean?

Chris's smile slowly faded, and he gazed at me in silence, creating an uncomfortable atmosphere. I felt compelled to break the silence, addressing Dr. Norman, "I think..."

Chris snapped back to reality, shaking his head, and said, "My apologies." He then let out a sigh, adding, "You look so similar to my sister... Being around you makes me feel as if she's still here with me."

He mentioned his younger sister before.

I asked curiously, "Is your sister..."

Has she passed away?

"No, she's still alive," Chris responded, his eyes filled with melancholy. "She's just like you, gentle, well-mannered, a bit clumsy, but has a kind heart."

No wonder.

I continued to ask, "Is she not here?"

Chris shook his head, his voice trailing off.

It seemed like it was a sad story.

I wanted to comfort him but I did not know what to say.

In the midst of the silence, Chris let out a sigh and said, "I'm sorry."

"Hmm?"

"I'm attached to you," Chris confessed, looking at me with sincerity. "It's because I'm selfish."

I added, "Is it because of your sister?"

Chris forced a smile and spoke softly, "I know you may find it hard to believe, but sometimes I feel like meeting you was by fate. Perhaps, at this moment, she has also found someone... someone like you. I can't help but want to treat you kindly."

I responded, "You don't need to apologize for that. In fact, I should be grateful to you."

Before Chris left, he went downstairs to run errands.

Feeling drowsy after breakfast, I lay down on the bed, wrapping myself in a blanket because the weather was cold.

However, as soon as I closed my eyes, the eerie doll appeared before me once again.

Reluctantly, I got up, too afraid to turn on the TV, as I dreaded seeing any distressing news. Instead, I switched on the music player and played a

I eventually drifted into slumber with the help of music.

Darkness enveloped me within the dream.

Huddled on the sofa, my gaze fixated on the piano nestled in the corner.

The sound of music filled the air, resonating with Beethoven's Moonlight

Sonata.

It was my mother's favorite melody.

However, the figure sitting at the piano, bathed in dim light, was not my mother but...

I never told Chris about this.

There was also a brother figure in my life.

Yet, both of us chose not to acknowledge each other's existence.

I woke up as my phone rang.

A familiar voice echoed through the receiver, "Vivienne, can you please open the door for me?"

I asked, "Open the door?"

"Yes, I'm downstairs," Anna replied. Just then, the doorbell chimed loudly in the room. "I'm freezing out here, hurry up."

I hung up the phone and walked to the door. Anna stood outside, donning a hat, sunglasses, and a scarf covering her face.

I swiftly opened the door.

Anna entered and a gust of cold air breezed through. "Oh, you lazy pig. I called you multiple times, and you still didn't wake up. I was on the verge of turning into a popsicle.”

As she spoke, Anna removed her sunglasses and unraveled her scarf, her face was covered in bruises and purple marks.

I exclaimed in shock, “Anna, who did this to you?”

“Harvey,” Anna replied, taking out a small bag from her purse and handing it to me.

I accepted it and asked, concerned, “Did you go to the hospital? Does it hurt?”

“It’s fine,

go later,” Anna reassured me, looking at my face. “It’s only been a day, did you lose weight?” She gently touched my face and urged, “Come inside, it’s freezing out here.”

She unbuttoned her coat and hung it on the hook.

However, I did not move and continued asking, “Why did he do this to you?”

“Because he wanted me to find out where you are, probably due to the pressure from Jaiden,” Anna explained, taking off her shoes. Then she added, “Don’t worry, I’ve been keeping an eye out the whole time. No one followed me.”

I opened the bag and made sure the phone was inside. I pulled it out and said, "I'll call Jaiden right away."

Anna placed her hand on mine and said, "Are you foolish? I'm here because I still need you."

"Then, Harvey...

"Let's talk inside," Anna interrupted, holding my hand. "Your hands are freezing. Come inside."

I sat on the sofa with Anna. She wrapped a blanket around me and asked, "How have you been eating without money? I'll buy something for you right now."

"I'm not hungry yet. Dr. Norman bought me some food," I replied, but then I suddenly remembered and quickly lifted the blanket.

Anna pressed down on my leg, saying, "What are you doing?"

"There's a first aid kit. I'll find it for you."

8/11

"There's no need," Anna insisted, covering me with the blanket again. "I'll leave soon. I'm here to tell you something. Didn't Harvey invite you for dinner today? Please don't go."

I had almost forgotten that it was Tuesday today.

“Do you understand what I’m trying to say?” Anna asked anxiously. “Jaiden will probably be there. If Harvey brings up the document about the abortion in front of him, how embarrassing would that be for Jaiden?”

There was something even more unsettling.

The date on the abortion document was reversed, and Jaiden had not touched me at that time.

I nodded and said, “Okay... Should I call him then? Things need to be said, right?”

“Just send him a message,” Anna suggested. “I’m afraid he’ll say something inappropriate again.”

I asked, “Did he... say something bad again?”

9/11

“It’s fine. I’ve already given him a good beating on your behalf,” Anna assured me, gently stroking my head and brushing her bruised lips. “I know that others .

may not understand, but you’re a pure and virtuous girl. It’s all slander.”

This was the first time Anna has openly praised me like this.

I felt a little overwhelmed and responded, “Thank you, Anna.”

“I’ll cook for you. Show me the message after you’ve written it,” she said, standing up and making her way to the kitchen. “Who would have thought that Dr. Norman is quite well–off? The houses in this neighborhood aren’t cheap.”

Anna hummed a tune while cooking, and I turned on my phone.

As soon as I switched it on, it began vibrating non–stop.

Some messages were from people who knew me.

Some were from Anna and the others.

And then, there was one message from Jaiden, “Where are you?”

I stared at those words, and a wave of disappointment washed over me.

Suddenly, the phone vibrated once more.

10/11

Initially, I had no intention of answering the call, but a tear fell onto the screen, and I ended up accepting it.

Reluctantly, I brought the phone to my ear, and I heard Jaiden’s voice. His tone was casual yet resolute. “Have you calmed down?”

I remained silent.

I did not want to talk to him.

1/11

Yesterday, I wanted to talk to Jaiden, but in the end, I could not bring myself to do it.

When I heard his voice, it broke my heart.

Jaiden remained silent for a moment and then spoke, "Harvey says he wants to invite us to dinner. I'll come pick you up."

"No," I replied, "I'm not free."

Jaiden's tone was unnervingly calm, it had no emotion. "Where are you?" he asked.

"I'm not telling you... I'm not going back," I said.

Jaiden's speech slowed down, "Where are you?"

I wanted to say I did not have much time left.

But I could not bring myself to finish the sentence.

Suddenly, Jaiden sneered.

"So, it's true that you went to Saint Jude Hospital, huh?"

I froze for a moment and asked, "What do you mean?"

Rebecca said that she was planning to take you to the Cianwood Hospital, but you refused to get out of the car, Jaiden said sorrowfully. "And she told me you said if you're determined to die, then you'll die by Dr. Norman's side."

I remained quiet.

The Cianwood Hospital was the closest hospital to the Fuchsia Building.

"Explain," he demanded ruthlessly, "Are you mute?"

"There's nothing to explain," I replied. "If that's what he wants, then I hope it turns out that way."

Jaiden fell silent abruptly.

I wiped away my tears and was about to end the call.

3/11

However, at that moment, a woman's displeased voice came through the receiver, interrupting our conversation. “Who are you talking to again? Didn’t you promise that you wouldn’t work today?”

It was Sue.

Jaiden’s voice immediately softened, “I’m sorry, it’s urgent...”

He ended the call.

I stared at the black screen for a long time, wiped away my tears, and blocked Jaiden’s number.

4/11

When Anna brought the food to the table, I had just finished writing the text to Harvey.

Anna frowned as she read it. “The miscarriage certificate is mine because the child doesn’t belong to my husband. I didn’t dare to bring it home, so I left it with my sister...” she read aloud. “Aren’t you hurting yourself by writing this? If Harvey tells Jaiden, it will only make things worse for you.”

I replied, “It’s fine.”

Taking the phone back, I sent the message.

Deep down, I even had a faint hope that Harvey would tell Jaiden about this.

Why was he always able to betray me so freely and cause me so much pain?

I already had over a dozen pieces of evidence of him cheating on me.

Anna snatched the phone from my hand, realizing it was too late. She looked at me with a helpless expression and said, "Did you argue with Jaiden?"

I nodded.

"This was my plan," Anna said, picking up a bowl and placing it in front of me, she filled it with soup. "I had the same idea yesterday, but it was difficult to discuss it over the phone. It's not that I don't have a place for you to stay, Jaiden knows where I live"

I remained silent.

"I'll talk to him this afternoon and ask him to give you some shares. We can hold a press conference and explain everything," Anna said. "You can make an appearance after the deal is done."

"I don't want to go back," I replied.

6/11

"What do you want then?"

"I want a divorce," I said. "Can you talk to him about it?"

Anna looked helplessly at me as if saying, "You can't carve anything out of rotten wood." She said, "You already have a terrible reputation now. If your divorce him, you'll never be able to recover."

I remained silent.

I did not want to talk about my illness to Anna, not since the day I found out about it. I always felt that Anna did not care about me that much.

But after this incident, I was slightly shaken.

She even got beaten up today because she was always thinking about me.

So I said, "Anna, I..."

Anna's phone suddenly rang.

When she picked it up, I saw the caller ID, and it was from "Old Man"

It was Cameron.

She stood up and walked towards the kitchen, saying, "Hello, Hubby..."

Then she closed the door behind her.

I picked up my drink and poured it into a glass. At that moment, my phone rang.

It was a friend request from social media.

After accepting the request, the person immediately sent a photo.

I clicked on the photo, and it was my identification card. However, in this photo, I looked more like Anna. The number on the front of the card matched the one shown in the news.

The documents were placed on top of a pile of items, which were Anna's wallet, car keys, and her favorite bottle of perfume.

After seeing the photo, I looked at the kitchen.

8/11

Anna was no longer in the kitchen. She seemed to be on the terrace outside.

I reached the entrance and opened Anna's purse.

Among a pile of documents, I found the fake ID card.

It felt like I was holding a hot soldering iron as I held the ID.

The intense pain spread from my palm to the depths of my heart.

Suddenly, Anna's voice came from the living room, "Vivienne, where are you?

Let's eat."

I quickly packed up Anna's belongings, tore the fake ID, and threw it into the trash can.

smiled at me. "Harvey just apologized to me and said he would give me half a million dollars to be transferred to you."

"I don't want it," I said.

Anna did not object either and continued to smile. "Then I'll help you to get some shares from Jaiden."

Anna had always been a great cook, but the food she prepared today was not delicious. Two of the four dishes lacked salt, and one dish had soy sauce instead of oyster sauce.

After finishing our meal, she said she had something to attend to.

I waited for a while before going to the entrance, where I saw Anna closing her bag.

As Anna was leaving, I could not hold back anymore and said, "Anna..."

Her hand was already on the doorknob, and she did not turn around.

I looked at her back and asked softly, "Do you hate me too?"

It took a long time for Anna to respond, "You were still young back then."

I was only nine years old at that time.

But unlike my weak social skills, my memory was very strong, almost like a computer's.

Even after fourteen years had passed, I still remembered that day vividly.

I was waiting in Uncle George's office and I did not dare to touch anything.

Meanwhile, important company documents were being sent from the president's computer to someone else.

10/11

The Nyra family was facing a crisis, and Uncle George committed suicide by jumping off the building.

Anna got married to Harvey.

11/11

The investigations consistently pointed toward me, but as a nine-year-old at the time, I was not held responsible for anything.

On that day, before Anna left, the last thing she said to me was, "Do you still want me to fight for your interests?"

I replied softly, "No." I explained, "I know you won't harm me because of this matter. You'll only make some money. But I don't need any shares. Thank you ,

Anna."

Anna nodded silently and left.

I intended to tidy up the house, but soon fatigue overwhelmed me, and I ended up falling asleep on the sofa.

Chapter 63

As I woke up, I heard the sound of my phone ringing. I reached for it and saw that it was Chris calling.

I answered, "Dr. Normandy"

"Yeah," Chris replied with a smile, "I'm off work. Are you doing okay?"

"Pretty good," I responded. Glancing at my watch, I noticed it was already six in the evening, so I asked, "How have you been working until now?"

"What's the matter?" He sounded like he was outdoors, with the sound of whistling wind coming through the receiver,

"You were at work yesterday morning, then again in the evening, and now you've just finished work," I explained. "Are you really that tired?"

"I was actually supposed to have last night off, but I switched shifts," Chris explained with a smile. "I can finally get some rest tonight."

“It seems a bit cold–hearted,” he said, though his tone remained gentle. “Don’t you even want to know why I changed shifts?”

My heart skipped a beat, and I asked, “Was it... because of me?”

“What if I said yes?”

“In that case...” Although he had mentioned taking care of me because of his sister, it still felt awkward. “Then how can I make it up to you? Can I pay you triple?”

He was silent.

“Hello?” I grew nervous. “Are you mad? I’m sorry, I’m not good with words,

Why did the receiver keep making a weird sound?

After a while, Chris finally spoke up, saying, “Sorry,” with a deep smile in his voice. “You’re just so cute.”

He was laughing at me...

3/10

“Are you mad?” Chris’s tone softened. “I wasn’t mocking you. I genuinely found it adorable.”

“I’m not mad.”

“I can tell that you’re angry,” Chris replied, the amusement leaving his voice.

“I’m not joking. In fact, a guest came to the emergency department just before my shift. You know, there aren’t many experts at Saint Jude Hospital. The dean asked me to attend to him, so I switched shifts.”

Saint Jude Hospital was not far from the cemetery and was located on the outskirts, so the medical equipment there was limited.

“Oh, I see...”

Chris burst into laughter again. “Don’t you want to ask what brought the guest to the emergency department? What if it’s related to you?”

“I won’t repeat the same mistake twice,” I said.

Chris chuckled once more. “Alright then.” After a pause, he continued,

“Although it’s getting dark, I still want to see you. Is that alright? I want to check if you’ve eaten well and do some examination on you.”

“Is that really necessary?”

“Yes, even though...” He suddenly changed the subject. “But you need to understand that there have been cases of patients with cancer healing on their own, as long as you’ve been taken care of properly.”

Although he talked about cancer, his gentle and warm demeanor made it feel less heavy. I smiled and said, "Your words aren't very scientific."

5/10

"Science is theology," Chris laughed. "I promise, I'll leave before eight o'clock, okay?"

Finally, I agreed to Chris's request, not because I believed in cancer healing by itself, but because I felt like I was already living in his world, and there was no need to keep refusing.

After hanging up the phone, I cleaned the house. My body was weak and even this small task left me trembling with exhaustion, my clothes were soaked in sweat.

After lying on the sofa for a while, the extreme fatigue gradually subsided.

Just as I was thinking of taking a shower, I heard a knock on the door.

Since outsiders had to ring the doorbell downstairs first, the person standing in front of my door could only be Chris. I did not suspect him, so I opened the door and said, "You came..."

But before I could finish my sentence, I froze.

Jaiden was standing at the door. He was dressed in all black. He wore a black coat, black trousers, and a black shirt. He was emotionless as if he was the Grim Reaper.

I was completely stunned, and all the blood in my body seemed to flow backward.

How did he find me?

Who told him? Anna?

This was Chris' house. He must have...

My thoughts were scattered as Liam said, "Get out of the way."

I snapped back to reality and hurriedly closed the door, but Liam forcefully pushed the door open.

The strength of the door knocked me off my feet, and as I stood up, I saw the bathroom door wide open. I rushed inside and locked the door.

7/10

Thankfully, Chris's bathroom had a latch, unlike my own door, which could be opened from the outside with a coin.

There was silence outside the bathroom door.

But after a moment, there was a sudden bang on the door panel in less than ten seconds!

He was pounding on the door!

I could not help but shudder, backing away instinctively.

The banging on the door grew louder and more forceful.

The loud noise reverberated in the confined room, and the space seemed to shake violently.

I was overcome with terror, my vision turned black, and I could not utter a

The latch fell off and the door swung open.

8/10

Liam stood at the door and his face was even more menacing than before, as he charged toward me with murderous intent.

In an instant, memories of the torturous experiences flooded my mind.

I was not afraid of death, but he did not kill me every time we fought.

I feared the excruciating pain, the sensation of dying, and the relentless cycle of despair.

In my frantic thoughts, Liam was just three feet away from me.

He could reach my neck and strangle me in the distance. Or he could slap me, or...

Feeling lost and desperate, I rushed towards him and embraced him with all my might.

I wrapped my arms tightly around his body, preventing him from moving and striking me.

It was the only way out.

Liam did not expect such a foolish tactic from me, so he momentarily paused.

Taking advantage of the pause, I uttered, "I'm sorry..."

I did not want a response from him. I lifted my face and pleaded with my eyes, saying, "I'm sorry, please don't be angry..."

Suddenly, something hard hit his back, and cold water suddenly fell from his head.

The bone-piercing coldness came, and I could not help shivering.

It's so cold!

I had a miscarriage yesterday, and I was afraid of the cold.

I wanted to survive. So, I grabbed Liam's arm and tried to tear him away. He seemed to be irritated and pressed me hard.

My body was numb from the cold, I did not know what he did, I just felt cold, hurt, and wanted to cry...

I opened my mouth to breathe, and at the same time, the water stopped.

A hand was pinched on the lower jaw. He did not use much force, but I was still terrified, and obediently followed his movement and raised my head.

Liam stared at me like a snake staring at its prey.

“You’re such an idiot.” His face was pale, panting lightly, and his voice was hoarse, “You’re an idiot who can’t even beg for mercy.”

I was silent.

I did not dare to reply, I tried to avoid his gaze but suddenly found that I was holding his arm, and the gap between my fingers was red.

I let go of my hand and looked at my palm.

It was blood.

He had caused me so much harm, and I did not feel any remorse for him, but...

I found myself short of breath.

After wiping my face, I looked up and met Liam's gaze. He stared at me for a moment, appearing to have regained his composure.

Startled, I hurriedly pushed Liam, urging, "Get out of my way, he's back..."

Liam ceased his movements, and it took him a while to lift his eyelids. "Back?" he repeated.

“Yes, he’s back...”

“You’re so excited to be his wife, huh?” He narrowed his eyes and spoke coldly,

We heard the door open.

Eventually, Liam did not succumb to madness. He pursed his lips and released his grip.

Then, Chris’s voice came through, filled with uncertainty, “Miss Nyra? Are you there?”

Liam grabbed a towel but seemed to remember something and tossed it aside in disgust. He took off his coat and threw it to me instead, then headed towards the door.

Chris replied, "Miss Nyra and I are friends. Our relationship is purely platonic. Please don't misunderstand us, Mr. Mendez."

Liam snorted coldly, opening his mouth to speak, but I quickly grabbed him and whispered, "Let's go. We still need to go to the hospital."

"Let me treat Mr. Mendez first," Chris said, hanging his coat on a hook. "It's peak hour and the nearest hospital is half an hour away if you're going by car. He lost a large amount of blood. If we're not careful, I might not be able to save his arm."

Chris went into his study, and I supported Liam as he sat down on the sofa. I said, “Give me the cigarette. I’ll throw it out.”

Liam ignored me and continued to smoke, flicking the ash into a glass on the table.

A few minutes later, Chris returned with a first-aid-kit. Seeing that Liam was still smoking, he frowned. “Mr. Mendez, I said...”

“Chris,” Liam blew a puff of smoke at him aggressively and grumbled, “You should be grateful that I only want to smoke a cigarette right now and not set you on fire.”

Chris pursed his lips, feeling uneasy. “Your wife hates the smell of cigarettes. Don’t you know that?”

When he returned, Chris was cutting the gauze, and I sat down next to Liam.

Chris looked up and said, "You should probably not look at it. It might be a bit unsettling."

I replied, "No, I can handle it, and I can help..."

Suddenly, darkness engulfed my vision.

I reached out to touch it and felt a smooth piece of fabric. I was about to untie it when I heard Liam's voice say, "You don't need to untie it."

The room fell into silence, with only the sound of tools clinking against each other.

Everything seemed to be going smoothly.

I felt a sense of relief.

But then, Chris suddenly exclaimed, "What are you doing?"

I anxiously asked, "What's wrong?"

"Don't make a fuss," Liam said coldly. "Is this your first day as a doctor?"

"Of course not," Chris replied, sounding a bit annoyed. "But it seems like you have a terrible memory. Have you forgotten how much effort it took to connect your nerves?"

I became even more anxious and asked, "What's wrong? Is it serious?"

As I spoke, I started to untie Liam's tie.

I saw a ring on his finger.

Liam spoke, "Tie it yourself."

"She needs to open it," Chris said. "I need help."

I quickly offered, "I can help."

"I'll help you, she doesn't know how to do it," Liam commanded. "Tie it up, don't make me repeat myself."

Although I wanted to tear off the tie, knowing Liam's persistent nature, I reluctantly tied it up.

Liam released his hand, and at that moment, Chris spoke, "Hold it here... Well, your technique is quite professional. Have you learned it before?"

Liam remained silent.

After waiting for a while, I asked, "Why isn't he speaking?"

Chris replied, "It seems that he has lost a lot of blood and is feeling a bit tired."

I hurriedly asked, "Should I call for an ambulance?"

Chris responded, "Not yet, I can manage this..."

"Call Jeffrey."

Just as Liam spoke, I felt something heavy being dropped onto my leg.

I touched it and realized it was his phone.

Just as I was about to remove the tie, Liam spoke again, "Call him outside and ask him to bring you a change of clothes."

Fortunately, the living room was not large, so I fumbled my way up and quickly found the doorknob. I opened the door and stepped outside, removing my tie. As I closed the door, I instinctively turned my head. However , before I could clearly see what was happening, I heard a commotion and a voice saying, "Close—the door!"

I closed the door.

When I turned on Liam's phone, I realized that it required a password.

Since he handed it to me directly... I should know the password, right?

I tried Liam's birthday, the founding date of the L.M Building, and his license plate. They were all incorrect.

Feeling frustrated with the incorrect passcode entries, I turned around and made my way back toward the door. Just as I was about to open it, I overheard Chris's voice from inside, "Anyway, thanks for yesterday."

Yesterday?

"You don't need to thank me," Liam replied. "I don't want to interfere."

"I understand, it's Miss Shaw's wish," Chris said. "Thank you as well, despite not doing anything, you were injured severely."

Liam scoffed, "And you're thanking me by keeping my wife at your home?."

Chris explained, "You didn't do anything. She's simply exhausted and needed somewhere peaceful to rest. You can see how weak she is."

“She has her own home,” Liam replied icily. “Your medical skills are commendable, and out of respect for my mother, I am willing to acknowledge that. But if you think this is an opportunity to take advantage of, you’re sorely mistaken.”

Liam’s mother?

I had never met any of Liam’s relatives before, and I always thought he was an orphan...

Chris remained calm, “According to what Miss Olsen mentioned when she brought her here yesterday, she said that you had confined her at home, denying her food and water due to the embarrassment you felt from the news. From her perspective, this situation presented an opportunity for her. Naturally, I couldn’t intervene on her behalf, could I?”

The voices grew louder.

No, if the argument continued, there might be another fight. So I reached out, intending to push the door open.

But then I heard Chris speak again, “Mr. Mendez, what you should be most concerned about right now is not other men taking her away, but her leaving you. If you don't appreciate what you have, you'll regret it once it's gone."

The more he spoke, the more twisted it sounded.

I knew I should push the door open, but my hand remained suspended in the air, unable to move for a long time.

I wanted to hear Liam's response.

However, Liam remained silent for a while before bursting into laughter. "Did she tell you to say that to me?"

Liam muttered with a smile, "That's right," and fell silent.

I turned around and switched on his phone once again.

Being a hypocritical woman, I could not confront him about the situation.

I thought of the possible passwords Liam could have set up.

Only one thing remained... It was our wedding anniversary.

Oh well, I'll give it a try, even if it seems useless.

It was a success.

I could not help but feel a little stunned, and as I opened his contact list, I realized it was the phone he used for work.

Shortly after, Jeffrey arrived with some clothes.

The bodyguard assisted Liam while Jeffrey carried a box full of cash, placing it on the table. Opening it, he said, "This is a token of gratitude. Dr. Norman, please accept it."

Chris said, "Mr. Mendez got injured yesterday while saving me. I shouldn't charge him for the consultation."

"This isn't a consultation fee," replied Jeffrey. "It's Miss Olsen's way of expressing gratitude to you for taking care of her husband."

After Jeffrey left, I bid farewell to Chris, saying, "Goodbye, Dr. Norman."

Chris grabbed my arm and said, "She told me about it, but it wasn't a deal. She hates you greatly. She told me that she didn't think you were worthy of being Liam's wife, and she wants to eliminate you as long as you're still here."

I remained silent.

Although I could not understand Rina's motive, she harbored a deep hatred for me.

"He exposed the rumors about you and declared his relationship with her. I don't believe he deserves to be your husband," Chris said.

"That's why I support this proposal. I sincerely hope you distance yourself from those disgusting people.”

Chris pursed his lips and said, “She assured me that she wouldn’t harm you. She also said that if I disagreed with her, she wouldn’t come here to intimidate you but to kill you.”

I remarked, “So you told her about my miscarriage and cancer?”

Chris appeared puzzled and replied, “She promised me that she wouldn’t tell this to anyone.”

As soon as the door opened, a gust of wind and snow rushed in.

Despite wearing a heavy overcoat, I could not help shivering from the cold. I quickly got inside.

Liam sat in the car, resting his head against the window, appearing fatigued.

I fastened my seat belt and overheard him instructing the driver, "Let's head back to Nyra Manor first."

I suggested, "Let's go to the hospital first."

"The oncologist talked about your irregular menstruation," Liam slightly opened his eyes and squinted at me, "You need to eat well, stay hydrated, be in a good mood, and avoid s*xual activity for at least a month. Otherwise, you may become indifferent in the future, possibly even infertile."

After speaking, he tossed a blanket.

I wrapped myself in the blanket and said, "Let's go to the hospital first. I can wait for you in the car."

Liam closed his eyes again and remained silent.

I instructed the driver, "Let's go to the hospital first."

The driver agreed.

I barely slept last night, and I felt extremely cold moments ago. Now that I was wrapped in a warm blanket and inside the car, drowsiness began to take over, so I rested my head against the car window.

As I drifted into a drowsy state, I suddenly heard a voice, "Come here."

I opened my eyes and looked at him.

“Come here,” he urged, extending his injured left arm.

I firmly responded, “No.”

“Come on, I won’t hurt you again,” he pleaded, “I miss you, come closer and let me hug you.”

I furrowed my brow, questioning, “Why are you behaving like this out of the blue?”

Considering his temperament, shouldn’t he have lost control by now?
