

191 191- Where Was Aurora?

Beta Hunter: 1

I went to the cell and found Luna Tamia still sleeping. We had injected her with a very small amount of wolfsbane, but still, she didn't want to wake up.

The guards on duty told me that she was awake initially, but after that, she was either sleeping or asking for food.

Since yesterday, she had finished tons of chicken, lots of bone broth, and several servings of raw spinach dipped in her favorite sauce.

I went inside and looked around for a blanket to cover her. She was still nak*ed and now didn't seem much interested in wearing clothes.

"Bring a maid who can at least put a robe on her,"
I sent a mindlink to a servant and got closer,
"Luna? Luna Tamia?"

She remained unmoved. I placed my index finger near her nostrils to check if she was breathing. Yeah, she was very much alive.

I moved back when two maids came inside and started slipping a robe on her body. One of them tried to unlock a chain so that she could guide her arm through it.

"Are you out of your fu*cking mind?" I roared. The maid holding the shorts flinched and was about to drop them.

I yanked the shorts from her hand and pulled them up over Luna's legs myself.

"Do I have to teach you about the basics?" I glared at her, "Don't you know that she is chained for a reason?"

I was not only the Royal Beta but also held a master's degree in criminal psychology. Such people could easily pretend for long hours and could harm anyone.

Both the maids got panicked and left the cell instantly.

"We have got such immature brats," I told myself and made it a mental note to ask the Royal butler to fire the incompetent ones.

We were not here to babysit careless servants.

I went ahead and tightened the chain around her wrists. The movement must have done the trick because she stirred and then let out a loud yawn.

"Luna. You're awake."

She hummed, then tried to open her eyes, "What difference does it make?" Her head dipped below, so I couldn't see her face, "Just be careful, Beta..." she snarled in her sleep, and that gave me goosebumps. Luna Tamia never talked to me in this tone. I knealed to see her face, "Be very careful," she continued, "Don't let Phoenix come near me or..." her lips curled into a sinister smile, "Or I will kill her."

Before I could answer her, she had gone back to sleep and was now snoring.

What was the matter with her?

Should I ask a doctor to check up on her? 1

Sebastian:

When I reached the hospital, Jai's surgeon took me directly to his room, "His heart condition is quite unstable. He has lost blood, and now his response to our meds is not good."

I walked to the man who was surrounded by all the tubes. His lifeless body held hope for my wife. I didn't want him to die.

Or Aurora would never be the same again.

"Hey!" I called him gently and sat on the stool, "She is trying, okay?" I held his hand. I was never a softie.

Aurora changed me from head to toe. Two years back, when I married her, I was taken aback by her beauty.

The way she used to steal glances, thinking that I wasn't noticing.

Nobody believed me when I tried telling everyone how I saw her there when the Luna Wing was on fire. She stopped near me, smiled, even touched my cheek, and then ran back to Luna's quarters. 2

And nobody could ever explain to me what had happened. If that was not Aurora, then who was she? And if that woman was my Aurora, then why didn't she try to talk to me? Nor did she seem scared due to the fire.

Was it magic?

Maybe I should have asked Amora. She might have answers to all my questions.

"She'll kill you if you don't wake up, man," I teased Jai, "She is trying so hard and maybe creating some magic in that hut," I finished with a low chuckle.

"See. I know we hate each other. Okay? But we both love the same woman," Goddess. I couldn't believe I was saying these words to another man.

If it were someone else, I would have killed him. But here I was, telling him that we both loved Aurora.

"Her happiness is above everything for both of us. We can hate each other, curse each other, even fight each other. But not now. This isn't the time. So you better wake up and make my queen happy," I was busy talking to him when the door opened and a girl entered the room. 1

I knew her. She worked with Amora. She bowed and then straightened, "I need to place this Emerald on his body, Your highness."

My eyes darted from the Emerald in her hand to the man lying on the hospital bed.

"Where are Amora and Aurora?" Wow, I never realized their names rhymed perfectly.

"They will join us in a few minutes," I nodded at her and got up. She went ahead and placed the Emerald on his forehead.

"Shouldn't it be placed above his heart," I told her curtly, "That's the part which needs treatment."

"The heart will come later, Your highness," she explained to me softly, "His brain needs it first. Because he doesn't want to accept any kind of treatment." 1

I frowned and gave a puzzled look to Jai, "What do you mean?"

"My king, he isn't interested in getting healthy. He wishes to die," my eyes snapped to Jai, who was lying there motionless.

"Seriously?" I smirked, "She's been driving herself half-mad, trying to help you... looking for ways to heal you... and here you're... refusing it?"

191 191- Where Was Aurora?

I shook my head, "Just because you're not interested? Unbelievable!"

I didn't give a damn that the girl could hear me.
All I wanted was to see that motherfu*cker stand on his two feet.

The girl had placed the Emerald on his forehead and was now reciting some chants. And I was no more interested in staying there.

*Fu*ck you, Jai Chris!* I muttered under my breath and left the room.

Where was Aurora? I needed to be with her.

Comment <sup>5</sup>

View All >

Leave the first comment for this chapter.

Vote

Send Gift