Chapter 341 A Test for Alan

Chapter 341 A Test for Alan

Amanda's POV:

"Do you think Alan would like someone like me?" Emily asked, frowning at me. Her voice was calm, but I could hear the worry hiding inside it.

People say girls lose their sense when they fall in love. Looking at Emily, so unsure and restless, I couldn't help but smile. "Let me put it this way," I said. "If you have to guess whether he loves you, then the answer is pretty clear. He doesn't love you enough yet."

"But he treats me well," Emily said quickly. She sounded stubborn. "We just haven't reached that stage yet. Feelings shouldn't be rushed."

"But look at it now," I said calmly. "You care more than he does."

Emily didn't even notice it herself. In her relationship with Alan, she was always the one who cared first and waited. She never took the lead.

Her face fell. She grabbed my arm and spoke in a soft, pleading voice. "Amanda, help me. How can I know what he really feels?"

I thought for a few seconds. Then an idea popped into my head. "Emily," I said with a smile, "why don't you come skiing with us? Invite Alan too. Time alone shows the truth. Maybe this trip will give you your answer."

"Skiing?" Emily's eyes lit up. She looked excited, then unsure.

"It sounds great, but will Alan even agree to go?"

I wasn't fully sure. But if Samson invited him, Alan would probably say yes.

In the end, we would need Samson's help. For my best friend's happiness, it was worth the trouble.

That night, when I got home, I told Samson about the plan. To my surprise, he agreed right away. No hesitation at all.

And just like that, our four-person ski trip was set.

Alan's POV:

The warmth of Christmas hadn't fully faded when the new week began.

Early Monday morning, just as the sky was getting light, Samson, Amanda, and I arrived at the airport.

I looked around and saw only the three of us. I frowned and complained to Samson, "What are you doing? Dragging me along to be the third wheel? I finally had time to rest at home."

Samson didn't explain. He just glanced at me. Amanda leaned closer with a mysterious smile. "Relax. There's a surprise waiting for you."

I wasn't interested. My head already hurt.

I had canceled everything so I could stay home and rest. Instead, I was forced into a ski trip.

Chapter 34 | A Test for Alan

Single me, stuck watching a couple show affection. Just thinking about it felt annoying.

But then, I took a closer look at them. They were polite and distant. There was no sweetness or romance between them. That made me feel a little relieved.

It seemed like Samson really was just honoring Grandpa's last wish with this engagement.

We finished checking in and walked into the waiting area. The moment we stepped inside, I saw Emily waving at us from across the room. She was smiling brightly. "Amanda! Over here!"

Amanda turned to me and raised an eyebrow. "Well? How do you like your surprise?"

I froze for a second. Then I understood. So this was Amanda's plan. She was trying to set us up.
