

Apocalypse 319

Chapter 319 Achievement Tab?

Aston was taken aback by Kisha's plan to start the Wall construction tomorrow. "But, City Lord, we still don't have enough construction materials. Did you happen to store some in your inventory?" Aston asked, his curiosity piqued. The others also looked at Kisha, wondering if she had indeed kept some construction materials in her inventory.

Even Duke raised an eyebrow at Kisha, unsure of her intentions. He suspected it was related to the mission she had discussed with Sparrow and Vulture earlier. Kisha wished she had all the materials they needed, but unfortunately, her supply was limited to what she had previously asked Duke to gather. She hadn't anticipated needing to turn City B's base into her new headquarters.

When she and Duke initially set up their base in the secluded mountain of City A, she had thought their worries would be minimal.

"Well, we recently found five Space-Type ability users with the same storage ability as mine," Kisha explained vaguely. "I'll be sending them out with Sparrow tomorrow to gather materials." Although her explanation was brief, everyone understood that she had a well-thought-out plan in place.

They were relieved and pleased to hear that such a useful ability had emerged within their base. This would greatly simplify supply runs, making the entire process much easier and more efficient for everyone involved.

Ding!

Noticing that everyone had stopped asking questions, and understanding her, Kisha resumed eating her meal. However, she was soon interrupted by another system notification.

The ringing echoed in Kisha's mind, and for the first time, she saw an overwhelming number of system notifications flooding her vision, rapidly stacking up like continuous alerts on a phone. The pop-ups appeared so quickly that she couldn't even properly read them all.

The Achievement tabs and store were completely new to her, something she had never unlocked in her previous lives. Unsure how to react, Kisha didn't even realize she had dropped her utensils mid-air, her hand instinctively covering her mouth as it formed a perfect 'O.' Her eyes were fixed on the stream of pop-ups, overwhelmed by the sudden flood of notifications.

Everyone at the dining table was startled by the sudden clatter of Kisha's utensils hitting the plate. The sound was sharp and loud, instantly drawing their attention. When they looked over at her, they saw a look of utter disbelief etched across her face.

Kisha was so absorbed in checking the new features that had appeared in her system interface that she didn't even notice everyone's eyes on her. Duke placed his hand gently on her lap, trying to get her attention, but she remained oblivious, staring blankly into the air. Judging by her reaction, Duke guessed she was likely immersed in her status window or exploring some of its new features.

He could clearly tell that Kisha was excited—so much so that she couldn't even wait to get back to their room to fully dive into her system interface. Realizing she was caught up in her own world, he simply shook his head with a smile and continued eating. The others, noticing Duke's subtle gesture, understood she was fine and resumed their meals as well, reassured by his silent cue.

Duke couldn't help but feel both amused and a little helpless seeing Kisha in this state. Her reaction seemed more human and endearing, a refreshing change. He much preferred seeing her busy and excited about something than watching her being stressed or having a mental breakdown.

The sight of her like this was a relief to him, and judging by their expressions, it seemed the others were thinking the same thing.

Realizing that Kisha was simply lost in her own excitement and appeared to be in a good mood, everyone stopped worrying. Initially, they had feared she was experiencing the same issues as at lunch, but it quickly became clear that this wasn't the case.

Unaware of everyone's concerns, Kisha was focused intently on her status window. Just beside the 'Title Tab' was the 'Achievement Tab,' which she eagerly clicked on. There, she saw the two new achievements she had just earned: 'Green Thumb' and 'Better Be Prepared.' She promptly checked both of them.

Kisha was pleasantly surprised to find an Active skill and a rare Passive skill included as a reward. On top of that, she received a new stat—'Luck'—which she anticipated would be incredibly valuable for her future endeavors.

Seeing the level of the reward, Kisha's frustration with the system melted away. She imagined the Constellation, who had been attempting to thwart her, seething with anger as Kisha reaped the benefits of her challenging mission.

She was eager to discover what these active and passive skills could do.

Kisha's eyes narrowed in delight, resembling a cat that had just stolen a big fish. She couldn't help the twitch of her lips as they formed into a pleased grin. At the same time, she couldn't shake the thought that her earlier mental breakdown had been premature—devastation had hit too soon, without her realizing there was a big surprise waiting for her later that night.

Was it that the Constellation felt guilty? Or perhaps the aggression aimed at her had become so blatant that the Constellation wanted to pretend nothing was amiss?
