Kisha glanced at the array of options available, but she couldn't muster the strength to explore them. Her vision was blurring more with each passing second, and she was barely managing to stay upright, relying solely on her sheer willpower to keep from collapsing.

Duke's eyes widened in horror as he saw blood seeping from Kisha's body. A vein in her hand burst visibly, spraying blood like a small fountain before it gushed out uncontrollably. His already frantic state intensified as he desperately tried to apply pressure to the wound. Despite his efforts, he could only cover so much with his two hands, and the blood continued to flow relentlessly.

He considered asking Kisha to take the vial of blue liquid to heal herself, but even though Kisha had thought of that too, it wouldn't address the root of the problem. Without resolving the underlying issue, her veins would continue to burst, and blood would keep spraying out like a fountain.

It would be akin to applying a bandage to a massive stab wound—only a temporary fix that wouldn't stop the ongoing damage.

Cough*

Kisha coughed violently again, her entire body feeling like it was on fire. Despite the pain, she managed to sit cross-legged on the floor and gave a slight, pained gesture to Duke, indicating that he should move back a little. Duke, though reluctant and filled with concern, complied and took a hesitant step back.

Kisha, feeling the urgency of her situation, hurriedly assessed the Achievement Shop to determine where to begin her search. With her time running out, she instinctively reached for the necklace that had caused her so much trouble. She quickly navigated to the 'Accessory Tab,' hoping to find something that could help balance her energies.

Fortunately, a search bar at the top of the tab provided a beacon of hope; she could now enter specific keywords to narrow down her options. She knew she needed a solution fast, so she focused her thoughts and began typing using her mind, hoping to find an item that could stabilize her condition before it was too late.

Kisha quickly focused her mind and typed "Spiritual Energy Amplification" into the search bar. Within moments, a wide array of accessories materialized before her eyes. The results ranged from simple necklaces and bracelets to intricate rings, each item varying in rarity from Rare to Mythical.

To her astonishment, she also encountered items classified as Divine, Cursed, and even God-level accessories, categories she had never seen before.

The sheer range of options was overwhelming, but amidst the dazzling array of potential solutions, Kisha's determination to find something that could immediately help her stabilize her two clashing energies. She needed to find the right item quickly, and she knew that exploring these categories could be crucial to resolving her dire situation.

The sheer amount of Achievement Points required to purchase these items was staggering, often reaching into the hundreds of thousands. While none of the items demanded a full million points, the sight of such exorbitant prices felt like a cruel joke in her current predicament. Each point was earned through significant effort and accomplishment, making the cost of these items seem even more daunting.

It was clear that accumulating enough points for these high-tier accessories was far more challenging than earning system points, which only added to her mounting frustration. The disparity in difficulty between acquiring Achievement Points and System Points underscored just how elusive and precious these powerful items truly were.

The contrast between the 'Mall Points Shop' and the 'Achievement Shop' was stark. While the Mall Points Shop often offered items through chance and occasionally required special sales channels, such as O08's, to access better goods, the Achievement Shop was a different beast entirely. It was a treasure trove of rare and powerful artifacts that couldn't be found in the Mall Points Shop.

In essence, the Achievement Shop was home to items of a caliber far beyond the ordinary—everything available was nothing short of extraordinary. It provided access to artifacts that were not just rare but often legendary, reserved for those who achieved exceptional feats.

The sheer exclusivity and quality of items in the Achievement Shop underscored its status as the ultimate destination for unparalleled treasures.

Through her increasingly blurry vision, Kisha managed to spot a jade earring among the myriad of options displayed before her. Desperation lent her focus as she reached out with trembling fingers and clicked on the item. The jade earring, with its delicate, frost-like sheen, seemed to glow with an ethereal light, promising the very solution she desperately needed.

As the item's details loaded, Kisha's heart raced with both hope and urgency, knowing that this could be her last chance to find relief and restore balance within her overwhelmed body.

Kisha didn't hesitate for a second and swiftly bought the Jade Earring. The accessory was stunning—delicately beautiful, resembling a teardrop about the size of a fingernail, with a mesmerizing frost-blue hue that gave it an appearance as though it had been sculpted from the purest ice.

As she gazed at it through her hazy vision, she could almost feel the slight chill emanating from the earring, the cold qi swirling gently around it, reinforcing its otherworldly aura. Despite the pain ravaging her body, Kisha was entranced by the craftsmanship and the promise of power it held.

Once the exchange was complete, Kisha's hand trembled as she attempted to put the earring on. Every movement felt agonizing; her body, battered and exhausted from the relentless pain, barely responded. Her arms refused to cooperate, weighed down by fatigue and the constant clash of energies raging within her.

Luckily, Duke was by her side. The moment he realized what Kisha was trying to do, he gently took the earring from her shaking palm, his own hands clammy with anxiety. His breath hitched as he carefully moved closer, guiding the delicate piece toward her earlobe. The coldness of the jade brushed against his fingertips, a stark contrast to the fiery heat radiating from Kisha's fevered skin.

His heart raced, every second feeling too slow, too fragile. He fumbled slightly, his nerves on edge, but he managed to fasten the earring in place. It was a small gesture, but the weight of it felt monumental. Both of them knew this simple act might be the lifeline Kisha desperately needed to survive.

The moment Duke finished fastening both earrings, a wave of icy relief surged through Kisha's body. The cool sensation spread from her earlobes, cascading down her neck and shoulders, flowing into every inch of her, like a soothing balm against the searing agony that had threatened to consume her moments before.

It wasn't just a surface-level chill—it felt as though the frost-blue jade was calming the very core of her being, taming the chaotic storm of clashing energies inside her.
