"What the—?! What's happening?!" Kisha exclaimed, barely catching her breath after delivering her final attack.

Just as the clock struck midnight, her timer let out a sharp ding, and a flood of system notifications exploded across her screen.

Before she could process them, 008 sent a burst of virtual fireworks—visible only to her—lighting up her interface. The messages kept rolling in, one after another, overwhelming her senses.

"Um, host... some of these system notifications were actually delayed," 008 admitted sheepishly.

"Remember when you completed those other missions—like surviving the Geostorm—and you only got two notifications back then? Well... I kind of held back the rest. You were too busy to care at the time, and I didn't want you getting distracted or letting your guard down."

"So, I figured it'd be best to release them all at once after you completed everything in the 'Mission Tab.' That way, you could enjoy checking out your full reward haul all at once!"

008 hesitated, unsure how Kisha would react to the revelation. It had made the decision without consulting her—would she be upset?

But as Kisha thought about it, she realized 008 had a point. If she had received the system notifications and seen her rewards earlier, she would have felt good—maybe even a little overconfident.

And while those rewards could have been a great help to both her and the base, they might have also made her underestimate the difficulty of surviving the endless zombie wave. That kind of false confidence could have been fatal.

Instead of getting angry, Kisha simply nodded, accepting 008's reasoning.

She then looked toward the wall, watching as the remaining zombie horde suddenly turned back, retreating as if summoned by an unseen force. Only then did Kisha let out a deep sigh of relief—they had survived the attack.

Ding!

[Congratulations on successfully surviving and completing the First Test!!!!]

"First test?" Kisha muttered, narrowing her eyes at the notification. "What does that mean, 008?"

008 hesitated before responding. "Host, I'm not entirely sure either... This message came directly from the Constellation."

[You Gained the 'Leader Of The Lower World' Achievement]

[You received 5,000 Achievements Points]

[You have successfully unlocked the 'Authority' Power]

[You received 20,000 Achievements Points]

...

Kisha drew a sharp breath as she looked at the points flooding into her account, her heart pounding with excitement. Her eyes flickered over her haul, checking each item one by one, and a satisfied smirk crept onto her lips.

[Current System Points: 200,001,680,000]

[Current Achievement Points: 35,000]

[120 Gachapon Draws]

[155 Resource Crates]

"Holy fucking GOD!" Kisha shouted inside her heart, eyes wide as she stared at the total amount of system points she had accumulated.

The majority came from the Hidden Mission: S-Class "The Saint"—a task that required her to warn as many survivors as possible. Unlike the first time, when her warnings fell on deaf ears, this time, people had listened.

And because of that, she had saved two hundred million lives.

If each life was worth 1,000 system points, then—her breath hitched—she had just earned an astronomical reward.

"Host! We're rich! We're rich!" 008 shouted excitedly inside Kisha's head.

She could practically picture the little system bouncing like a sprite around in sheer joy as they both stared at the mind-blowing number of system points in their account—something they had never even dreamed of achieving.

Kisha's pulse raced. "Alright! Don't we have that 50% Mall Points Discount Coupon?!" she exclaimed, her excitement skyrocketing. "We'll splurge on supplies and other essentials, but first—let's do the Gachapon Draw and open up the Resource Crates!"

Lost in the thrill of the moment, she completely forgot that she was still floating above the battlefield—having just barely survived yet another brutal day.

The 'Mission Tab' was now grayed out, indicating that she had no active missions.

For the first time in a while, she could afford to take a breather—at least until the next mission popped up.

Before diving into what she truly wanted to do, Kisha pulled up her Stat Window once more. Her stats had increased from her recent accomplishments, but with the overwhelming zombie wave finally gone, the temporary boost from her 'One-Man Team' skill had faded, bringing her stats back to their normal levels.

Now, even her Defense had surpassed 500 points, making her a walking fortress. She could feel the sheer power coursing through her body, a tangible testament to how far she had come.

A deep sense of satisfaction settled over her—every struggle, every hardship, every moment of chaos had been worth it.

One look at the rewards in her inventory, and she knew—this was the payoff for all her hard work.
