The Amazing son in law Chapter 7810

Feeling somewhat angry, charlie wade immediately said to the people around him, "Let's go back to the car."

The group was completely baffled.

Just now, charlie wade was thinking of avoiding trouble and walking there directly, so why did he suddenly want to go back to the car?

Lin Wan'er was the first to understand. She turned around and came to charlie wade, smiling as she asked him, "Young Master, are you planning to teach them a lesson?"

charlie wade nodded and said, "We need to embarrass them in front of the whole world and let the world know the true colors of these hypocrites."

Lin Wan'er reminded him, "Young Master, many people are filming videos, and quite a few are live streaming. The whole world might be watching. You must be careful."

charlie wade nodded and smiled, "Of course, that's why I said everyone should go back to the car first. I have my own ways of dealing with these people."

The four women, including Helena, were both angry and disgusted by the behavior of these extreme environmentalists. If they could teach them a lesson and ruin their reputations in front of the world, it would be a way of doing justice.

So everyone immediately returned to the car. At this time, Helena's phone had already received a push notification from the Nordic news app. The highway to the capital's largest airport was blocked and countless passengers were stranded. The impact of this incident was still very serious, so the media and the public were paying close attention.

Helena also realized how absurd environmental protests, which seemed commonplace in everyday life, were after experiencing them firsthand.

The Nordic countries are already among the world's most environmentally conscious and clean energy-focused countries, yet surprisingly, they still manage to gain a foothold among these extreme environmentalists.

The key point is that the people don't dare to oppose them directly; they only dare to reason with them.

However, a truly reasonable person can never win an argument against someone who is not.

Like that Tesla owner just now, he is already a representative figure of the Nordic elite class. He chose an electric car, and his clothing and speech were very gentlemanly and proper. When arguing with others, he followed the facts and even used data to speak.

However, such a reasonable gentleman has no chance of winning when he encounters an unreasonable rogue.

Putting everything else aside, a reasonable gentleman is too embarrassed to lie, and on this point alone, he can never win against the other party.

She sighed to Charlie Wade with some embarrassment, "I'm sorry, Mr. Wade, Europe has indeed become a bit sick these days. I will have a good talk with my cabinet members about this and push for the implementation of a law as soon as possible that will not allow any extreme environmentalists to demonstrate and protest in a way that affects others."

Charlie Wade said with a serious expression, "Europe's decline can be seen from the continuous occurrence of such absurd things. All sorts of far-fetched and unnecessary things are emerging one after another. People and countries are too easily kidnapped and coerced by these so-called environmentalists. It is said that a power plant in Germany with an investment of 3 billion euros was forced to be dismantled for 300 million euros after only six years. Your country must not follow in their footsteps."

Helena said helplessly, "European politicians don't dare to offend these groups because they are afraid of losing votes. So whether it's 3 billion euros or 30 billion euros, they don't care. Even if it's wasted, it's the taxpayers' money that's being wasted. The taxpayers are the ones who pay for it, and the ones who want to demolish it are also the taxpayers. The politicians' attitude can be summed up in one sentence: 'As long as they're happy.'"
