

The Amazing son in law Chapter 7888

It will take Wu Bolin (Bick) at least five more days to get back to Wu Han Palace.

The second transport fleet of the U.S. military arrived at the necessary route for their return journey a little over an hour later.

This airborne operation involved no individual soldiers; it consisted entirely of M1128 infantry fighting vehicles, M142 self-propelled rocket launchers, and accompanying reconnaissance vehicles.

The M1128 infantry fighting vehicle is equipped with heavy machine guns, grenade launchers, and even a 105mm tank gun, enabling it to form a fire network covering both short and long ranges with the M142. In addition, the reconnaissance vehicle is equipped with a high-power, high-precision radar, which can detect mobile targets and even individual targets within a radius of tens of kilometers and assist the M1128 and M142 in precision strikes.

After landing safely, the vehicles immediately concealed themselves behind a hill, with their radars at full power, awaiting the arrival of the Japanese expedition team's snowmobile convoy.

The Japanese surrender delegation, including Goro Watanabe, was unable to land at McMurdo Station because the plane they were on did not land but instead parachuted to the midpoint to wait for the second wave of planes.

After the second group of planes arrived, their plane landed on the Antarctic ice sheet, where Goro Watanabe and all the members of the persuasion team disembarked.

The second echelon of transport planes had two more aircraft than the first echelon. After dropping heavy equipment into Antarctica, they immediately set off to return. As for Watanabe Goro and the others, they all stayed inside the infantry fighting vehicles as required. For the next period of time, they had to eat and live with the American soldiers in the infantry fighting vehicles. They ate individual rations, and as for sleeping, they would just lean back in the small seats and take a nap when they were tired.

Since the infantry fighting vehicles did not have toilets, the US soldiers dug a snow pit in the field to use as a makeshift toilet. The makeshift toilet had a diesel heater to maintain a certain temperature. Otherwise, if a person had to defecate in such conditions, they would likely suffer from frostbite. If they also had constipation, it would be one of the most torturous things in the world.

Such harsh conditions caused the Japanese surrender delegation great suffering, but they had no choice. They were on American planes, and wherever the Americans told them to go, they had to go. In the freezing Antarctic polar night, even if they wanted to leave, they had nowhere to go.

What frustrated Goro Watanabe even more was that the American commander never even got off the plane; he just made a quick trip to Antarctica and then returned to his military base in South America.

Two days later, Wu Bolin (Bick)'s convoy was gradually approaching.

However, no one, including Wu Bolin (Bick), realized the danger involved.

They were detected and locked onto by radar when they were still dozens of kilometers away from the US military. M142s could launch guided rockets at them at any time, but the US military's operational plan was to capture them alive as a priority.

First, capture the Japanese research team members heading to McMurdo Station, then conduct a surprise interrogation to find out the root cause of their treason and how many potential enemies still exist at the Showa research station in Japan.

After figuring out the situation at the research station, they will formulate the next phase of their plan: to go to the Showa Research Station to quell the rebellion.

Wu Bolin (Bick) endured a bumpy journey, but seeing that the other side had not sent any pursuers for two consecutive days, he gradually relaxed.

In the past two days, Kohei Kikuchi has also been in contact with other members of the research team at Showa Station via satellite phone to inquire about the current situation of the research station. The feedback he received was that everything was normal and no strangers had approached.

Wu Bolin (Bick) naturally trusted these people implicitly, since they were all puppets controlled by his psychological suggestion, and they would rather die than betray him.

With no formidable enemies ahead and no pursuers behind, he felt much more at ease, and everything was ready to be discussed further upon returning to Wu Han Palace.

However, he was unaware that multiple offensive weapons systems of the United States had already locked onto them and were ready to fire at any moment.

Just when the two sides were less than five kilometers apart, all the American armored vehicles simultaneously emerged from the other side of the hill, charging towards Wu Bolin (Bick)'s snowmobiles in a pincer attack.

The Japanese research team members around Wu Bolin (Bick) were completely unaware of the distance, which was several kilometers away.

Wu Bolin (Bick), however, keenly sensed the roar and vibration of several diesel engines several kilometers away. He was immediately alarmed and exclaimed, “At least eight vehicles are approaching us!”

“Really?” Kohei Kikuchi asked, completely bewildered. “Everything looks normal from the outside, Masato.”

Wu Bolin (Bick) said seriously, “You’ll soon find out that I feel very unwell right now, like I’m being stared at.”

Kohei Kikuchi asked in surprise, “Masato, could we have already been targeted by them?”

“Locked on?” Wu Bolin (Bick) frowned and asked, “You mean, you’re locked on by the enemy’s weapon?”

“Yes,” said Kohei Kikuchi. “We are civilian vehicles. The other side can easily lock onto us with fire control radar. Once locked on, we will have no chance of escaping.”

Wu Bolin (Bick) immediately said, “Quick! Retreat at full speed and then head south to try and shake them off!”

The driver immediately made a U-turn and then drove at full speed in the opposite direction.

Upon seeing this, the approaching US forces, forming a pincer movement, immediately accelerated to give chase, while simultaneously issuing a radio warning: “Attention Japanese research team, we are the United States military. We demand that you stop immediately for inspection, or we will open fire on you immediately!”

Kohei Kikuchi understood the other person’s English and said nervously, “It’s a real person, it’s the US military. They want us to stop for inspection, or they’ll open fire!”

Wu Bolin (Bick) gritted his teeth and said, “Damn it, they even sent people to intercept us. Are they trying to trap us like dumplings?”

He cursed angrily, then said to Kohei Kikuchi, “Tell them that we are just ordinary members of a Japanese scientific expedition team. We don’t want to cause trouble, but we also don’t want to be controlled by them.”

Kohei Kikuchi immediately replied in English, “Sir, we are researchers from the Showa Research Station in Japan, currently on a scientific research mission. You have no right to demand that we stop for inspection.”

Immediately, Goro Watanabe's voice came from the other end, sternly rebuking in Japanese: "Damn it! I am Goro Watanabe from the Japanese Ministry of Education, Culture, Sports, Science and Technology. The Ministry of Education, Culture, Sports, Science and Technology did not issue you any large-scale exploration missions this winter. Who exactly is carrying out the missions assigned to you?! Do you know that you are now suspected of treason?!"

Kohei Kikuchi's face turned deathly pale.

He looked at Wu Bolin (Bick) and said nervously, "Master, the second-in-command of the Ministry of Education, Culture, Sports, Science and Technology has arrived. Even he has come here, so it seems that he must have noticed our actions. What should we do now?"

At that moment, Wu Bolin (Bick) realized that he would never be able to return to Wu Han Palace.

Japan has already noticed Wu Hangong's problems, and they will not rest until the matter is thoroughly investigated and resolved.

Moreover, he had previously planned that if the US military approached, he could blend in with the Japanese research team and get away with it, or find another opportunity among them. But since even Japan had sent people, it meant that his chances of getting away with it in the research team were almost zero.

A nervous Wu Bolin (Bick) immediately asked Kikuchi Kohei, "If I run away now, can I still escape?"
