

The Amazing son in law Chapter 7890

As his most loyal follower, Kikuchi Kohei showed no doubt or disappointment in the face of the questions raised by Wu Bolin (Bick).

On the contrary, he thoughtfully analyzed: “Whether you can escape depends on whether the other party has the ability to lock onto you and launch an attack.”

Wu Bolin (Bick) was extremely frustrated; at this moment, neither advancing nor retreating seemed appropriate.

Advancing would simply mean fighting your way through and taking down the American and Japanese soldiers ahead by yourself.

In Wu Bolin (Bick)’s view, if he could dodge their firearms and get close enough to kill them one-on-one, it might not be a pipe dream.

The problem is, this is not an unprepared Japanese expedition team; it is a regular American army.

This means that all their current actions are likely being transmitted to their superiors in real time via satellite.

This is the difference between modern times and a hundred years ago. In the society of a hundred years ago, one would have no fear. Even if an army were chasing one, as long as one killed all those chasing one, one could ensure that one’s information would not be leaked by the dead.

But things are different now. Although he still has the ability to kill them, he no longer has the ability to stop the real-time transmission of data.

In that case, even if I killed them, I would still be exposed, revealing not only my identity and the existence of a cultivator to the whole world, but also attracting even more frantic attacks from the US military.

However, retreating doesn’t necessarily mean one can truly escape unscathed.

Putting aside the risk of being hunted down again, just considering the harsh environment of Antarctica, even if I have high cultivation and don’t need to eat, what good is it? Maintaining my body’s survival and function in this environment requires a constant consumption of a large amount of spiritual energy, and I have recently consumed a lot of spiritual energy. It will indeed be very difficult for me to survive this winter in Antarctica.

Seeing that he remained silent, Kohei Kikuchi gave his opinion: “Masato should run away! If you run away, you will still have a chance to survive. If you don’t run away, once they catch you, you won't be able to withstand Watanabe Goro's screening and you will be exposed very quickly."

Wu Bolin (Bick) nodded solemnly.

Kohei Kikuchi is right.

Staying means certain death.

Even if you manage to escape after being captured, it is by no means a good choice, because rather than waiting to be exposed before escaping, why not escape before being exposed?

Having made up his mind, he asked Kohei Kikuchi, "If I run away now, what methods can I use to avoid their detection?"

Kohei Kikuchi frowned and thought for a moment, then said, "Reporting to you, Master, that's not difficult. They didn't activate any reconnaissance aircraft or helicopters, so their detection equipment must be vehicle-mounted individual radar or thermal imaging devices. Both of these devices have a major drawback: they cannot penetrate steel or complex objects. In other words, since we are currently inside the snowmobile, their radar can only scan the snowmobile, but it can't detect how many people are inside. The thermal imaging can only see the snowmobile's exhaust and the heat radiation generated by the engine, but it can't see the heat radiation signals of us inside the snowmobile."