Chapter 7987

4-4 minutes

In America, if money can't buy anything, it just means you haven't spent enough.

With a top family like the Rothschilds, there's practically nothing they can't accomplish.

When the helicopter brought Charlie Wade and Lin Wan'er (Alani) to Stanford, the university president was already waiting at the helipad.

The president didn't know who the guests were; he'd only heard that the Rothschild family's helicopter pilot had informed Stanford's administration that they were bringing two people to visit Stanford and needed to request landing time. Even though no one from the Rothschild family had contacted him directly, it didn't stop him from personally welcoming these unknown VIPs.

The moment the helicopter landed, the president, braving the immense wind pressure from the rotor blades, stepped forward and personally opened the cabin door for the guests in the back.

When Charlie Wade and Lin Wan'er (Alani) stepped out of the helicopter, the elderly president was somewhat taken aback.

He hadn't expected the Rothschild family to send two young people with Asian faces.

The helicopter rotors slowly came to a stop, and the deafening noise gradually subsided. The president looked at Charlie Wade and Lin Wan'er (Alani), smiling humbly, and said, "Welcome to Stanford, distinguished guests. I am James White, the president of this university. May I ask your names, and how may I assist you?"

Charlie Wade naturally knew that this academic heavyweight was only giving him face because of the Rothschild family.

In the past, given Charlie Wade's pride, he probably wouldn't have bothered with much interaction; simply offering him and Lin Wan'er (Alani) a favor at Stanford would have sufficed. But now, Charlie Wade suddenly felt that since the other party was giving the Rothschilds so much face, he might as well make good use of them, since the Rothschild family was signing the contract anyway.

So he said to James White, “Hello, Principal White, my friend Steve Rothschild of the Rothschild family is on his way. He was originally going to come and be our guide, but it will take several hours to fly from the East Coast. In the meantime, I’ll have to trouble you to act as our guide.”

Although Charlie Wade spoke politely, his tone wasn’t one of request or seeking the other party’s opinion, but rather a direct statement of his need, leaving no room for refusal.

From the moment Charlie Wade mentioned Steve Rothschild’s name, James White was prepared to serve this Chinese man like a slave, doing whatever it took.

Not for any other reason than Steve Rothschild’s sake.

After all, Steve was the de facto second-in-command and heir to the position of patriarch of the entire Rothschild family.

James White had initially assumed the visitors were either distant relatives or collateral relatives of the Rothschild family. Upon seeing two Chinese people, he instinctively assumed they weren’t even distant relatives, but rather just people with some shady connection to the Rothschilds who had hitched a ride on their helicopter.

However, Charlie Wade’s words instantly changed his mind.

These two young Chinese men not only had direct ties to the Rothschild family, but were even important figures like Steve. More importantly, he’d heard that Steve was coming all the way from the East Coast for them—what a huge favor! If he treated them well, Steve would surely remember him when he arrived.

Despite being the president of Stanford, he wasn’t entirely dedicated to academics. He understood and followed the unspoken rules of high society better than anyone.

This is the difference between America and China. In China, money alone is unlikely to secure admission to top universities like Tsinghua and Peking University. But in the US, money can get you into not only Stanford, but also Harvard and MIT. Otherwise, we wouldn't see wealthy businessmen donating tens of millions of dollars to Harvard for their sons' education.

Therefore, even the president of Stanford has to bow to the powerful, especially top figures like the Rothschilds.

Seeing that invoking Steve's name worked so well, Charlie Wade became even less polite and directly asked Lin Wan'er (Alani), "Miss Lin, what would you like to see or visit? Let Principal White show us around."

Lin Wan'er (Alani) nodded happily and then said to White, "Mr. White, I'd like to visit the university history museum and read all the historical materials that aren't publicly available."

White was somewhat surprised. He couldn't understand why this young girl had come to Stanford, not to tour the school, not to listen to explanations, but only to see the materials in the history museum that weren't publicly available.

In fact, most of the materials were from the 19th and 20th centuries, a time when the rule of law was less developed, and many atrocities against Native Americans occurred in America. Therefore, these now-renowned universities also had some unspeakable dark histories in their past, and these histories were naturally not open to the public; some were even classified as top secret.

However, Charlie Wade had already invoked Steve's name, so White agreed almost without hesitation, saying, "Since you two are interested in the school's historical materials, I will personally take you to the school history museum. However, some things are quite sensitive; they are top secret documents as determined by the White House. You can look through them, but you cannot take photos. I hope you understand."

Lin Wan'er (Alani) nodded and said, "Don't worry, Principal, we will abide by the rules."

White breathed a sigh of relief and personally acted as their guide, leading them to the school history archives. Stanford's historical archives are an inconspicuous three-story building within the office area.

However, the truly core content is hidden in the underground space beneath that three-story building.

Constructed as impregnable as a bank vault, it stores a vast number of unique documents without any electronic versions. According to White, these sensitive, highly classified documents should normally have both physical and electronic copies, but because most of the historical events are not exactly honorable, no copies were made.

The current preservation strategy is summed up in eight words: “Do not disclose, fear not damage.”

This means that if they remain here, they will continue to be preserved as unique items, never to be disclosed. Authorized individuals can access them in person, but the contents cannot be taken away.

If these materials are accidentally destroyed for any reason, they are not worried about the complete disappearance of the archives, because the loss of those things may not be a bad thing; it simply means that those events are no longer verifiable.

It’s like a criminal keeping photos taken during a crime at home, something they can look at occasionally but can’t let slip. If the house catches fire and the photos are accidentally burned, it doesn’t matter; they can simply stop looking at them.

However, Lin Wan’er (Alani) wasn’t interested in America’s dark history from that era. After all, she had witnessed that time firsthand—the slave trade and the plantation era—so such dark history was nothing new to her. What truly interested her were the other parts of the school history, the parts related to Charlie Wade’s mother, Lydia (Ava) (Charlie’s mom).

Ever since meeting Lydia (Ava) (Charlie’s mom) and learning her identity, Lin Wan’er (Alani) had been incredibly curious about this woman.

She greatly admired Lydia (Ava) (Charlie’s mom). For so many years, she had been hiding from Sara, only thinking of avoiding her discovery, never taking the initiative. But Lydia (Ava) (Charlie’s mom) was the complete opposite. From the day she faked her death and escaped, she had been secretly fighting Sara. Although she and her team were far inferior to Sara in terms of strength, her courage alone was something Lin Wan'er (Alani) greatly admired.

Moreover, although Lin Wan'er (Alani) had also studied at Stanford, she had always been a quiet learner, never daring to excel in any field. Lydia (Ava) (Charlie's mom), on the other hand, was one of Stanford's most outstanding alumni in recent years. Many of her business ventures were highly forward-thinking, making her one of Silicon Valley's top angel investors.

Therefore, this time, besides reminiscing, Lin Wan'er (Alani) also wanted to learn more about Lydia (Ava) (Charlie's mom).

Because she always felt that she would inevitably have to deal with Lydia (Ava) (Charlie's mom) in the future.

The two arrived at the archives, which were considered top secret. Following procedure, the archive staff covered the cameras on both of their phones with blackout stickers and then placed the phones in a transparent bag with a special magnetic clasp. This prevented visitors from photographing the top-secret documents while allowing them to safely hold and use their phones normally.

charlie wade didn't understand why Lin Wan'er (Alani) wanted to see the school history archives; he simply indulged her subconsciously, doing whatever she wanted.

Inside the archives, Lin Wan'er (Alani) didn't hide anything from charlie wade. Seeing that the archives were organized by year, she went straight to the cabinet containing Lydia (Ava) (Charlie's mom)'s records from his years at Stanford.charlie wade had assumed Lin Wan'er (Alani)'s time at Stanford was all from the early 20th century or even the late 19th century, so he naturally looked for files in the cabinets corresponding to those periods. However, he was surprised to find that Lin Wan'er (Alani) had chosen the 1980s.

charlie wade suddenly remembered that was exactly when his mother was at Stanford, so he curiously watched to see what Lin Wan'er (Alani) was looking for.

Lin Wan'er (Alani) didn't hide anything from charlie wade, smiling as she said, "I came here mainly to learn about your mother's life and her records at Stanford."

charlie wade nodded slightly and asked, "Miss Lin, why are you suddenly interested in my mother's past?"

Lin Wan'er (Alani) smiled and said, "Your mother was an outstanding Chinese woman and a business elite. Her achievements fill me with admiration. Coincidentally, I attended the same school as her, so upon returning to Stanford, I wanted to learn more about her life. She was once the pride of Stanford, so I also wanted to know if the top-secret school history would record any unknown aspects of her life."

charlie wade didn't doubt her and smiled, remarking, "Now that you mention it, I'm quite curious too."

There were many major events in Stanford's history during the 1980s.

Because these are classified documents that cannot be distributed, there are no electronic versions or electronic retrieval systems. Otherwise, simply typing "Lydia (Ava) (Charlie's mom)" into a computer would automatically bring up all the documents.

Here, they can only search for Lydia (Ava) (Charlie's mom)'s name through the Yellow Pages, which lists the titles of each year's files. If Lydia (Ava) (Charlie's mom)'s name is found there, related content can be found. However, this method only finds records primarily about Lydia (Ava) (Charlie's mom). If the record focuses on other people and Lydia (Ava) (Charlie's mom) is secondary, the Yellow Pages title is unlikely to mention her name.

Interestingly, charlie wade and Lin Wan'er (Alani) quickly found some content related to Lydia (Ava) (Charlie's mom), but this content was not about Lydia (Ava) (Charlie's mom)'s events. Instead, it recorded interactions between Stanford officials and the CIA, including a document titled "Recommendation to the CIA to Restrict Lydia (Ava) (Charlie's mom)'s Exit from the Country."

The two found the original file based on the serial number. It was a letter of advice personally written to the CIA by the then-president of Stanford University. In the main text, the president detailed Lydia (Ava) (Charlie's mom)'s capital operations and achievements in Silicon Valley, mentioning that she already showed signs of intending to return to China. He believed that if Lydia (Ava) (Charlie's mom) returned to China, given the strength of the An family, Lydia (Ava) (Charlie's mom)'s abilities, and her prior investments in the Silicon Valley technology sector, it would pose a significant threat to the development of emerging industries in the United States.

The original letter was followed by the CIA's reply three days later, in which they had restricted Lydia (Ava) (Charlie's mom)'s departure from the country and thanked the president for his advice.

Lin Wan'er (Alani) asked with some surprise, "Since the president of Stanford University already had this understanding, and the CIA agreed with his advice, why did your mother still return to China smoothly? Were there any obstacles along the way?"

charlie wade shook his head, "I haven't heard of that."

Lin Wan'er (Alani) said, "Let's see if there are any other files."The two continued reviewing the catalog and quickly found a letter registered two months later than the previous one.

This letter was from the former president of Stanford University to the CIA. It retracted his previous assessment of Lydia (Ava) (Charlie's mom), stating that whether Lydia (Ava) (Charlie's mom) returned to China or not no longer posed a threat to the development of America's emerging industries. Interestingly, he detailed the reasons for retracting this assessment, one of which was that Lydia (Ava) (Charlie's mom) had shifted her focus from internet and high-tech industry development to antique research and proving the hypothesis that extraterrestrial life had once visited Earth. In the president's own words, Lydia (Ava) (Charlie's mom) had lost her commercial drive and even absurdly attempted to collaborate with Stanford to conduct an in-depth investigation into this matter. In the letter

, the president also described in detail Lydia (Ava) (Charlie's mom)'s so-called "fallacies." Lydia (Ava) (Charlie's mom) believed that human history was not the only history of advanced intelligent life on Earth. She firmly believed that before human history, Earth must have had interstellar colonial civilizations far more advanced than modern civilization, and that many miracles attributed to humans, and even some religious records, were likely related to these interstellar colonial civilizations.

At the time, she even desperately hoped that her alma mater, Stanford, would accept her hypothesis and work with her to find direct evidence. However, in the eyes of Stanford's then-president, this was simply a waste of time.

charlie wade and Lin Wan'er (Alani) were both extremely shocked when they saw this. charlie wade frowned and said, "Could it be that my mother found evidence of those cultivators visiting Earth back then?"

Lin Wan'er (Alani) said solemnly, "It may not be direct evidence. Your mother is an exceptional person. It's very possible that she deduced this conclusion based on some clues. Just like Mendeleev was able to deduce undiscovered substances through the periodic law of elements, as long as there are enough supporting clues, even without direct clues, it can be determined that something must exist. And history will eventually find direct evidence to prove him right."
