charlie asked again, "Any other details?"

Steve thought for a moment, "As for details, there doesn't seem to be anything special. They're based in California, and I don't have much contact with them usually."

charlie asked, "Are there any specific requirements for marriage among the direct members of your Rothschild family?"

Steve said, "Of course there are. First, for the line of succession, the main requirements for marriage among direct members are the strength and status of the other family. Secondly, there's the bloodline of the other family. The family must be of old noble lineage, and they must be of Western, pure white descent. The family history must withstand scrutiny for at least two or three hundred years. If it's not the line of succession, the requirements will be more relaxed."

charlie asked him, "So, you and your family members belong to the line of succession, but your fourth brother's line doesn't count, right?"

Steve immediately said, "Of course! I haven't ascended the throne yet. Once I do, although my fourth brother and his family also have the surname Rothschild, they will already be defined as a collateral branch. When my children ascend the throne, my other children will also..." "Being separated will only push them further away from the core of our Rothschild family."

charlie then asked, "Is it possible for your fourth brother's grandson to be allowed to marry a mixed-race woman?"

Steve thought for a moment and said, "If Robert wants to marry a mixed-race woman, at least not now, because they are still considered first-generation direct descendants. All first-generation direct descendants must submit an application to the family's clan and have it reviewed by the family elders. Only those who pass the review can marry. If they don't pass or marry without applying, the punishment is very severe. However, once I succeed to the throne, they will be immediately removed from the category of first-generation direct descendants. At that time, they will have some autonomy in their marriages, and the requirements will not be very strict. In terms of bloodline, as long as 50% Western white blood can be guaranteed, the other 50% is not mandatory. It can be black or yellow.”

charlie raised an eyebrow, looking at the incomparably beautiful mixed-race girl in the room, and sighed inwardly: It seems that the Destroyer Society has long since figured out the various internal requirements of the Rothschild family and has begun to customize mixed-race marriages for them.

Steve then added, “By the way, Mr. wade, even if it’s 50% mixed-race, we still have requirements regarding family background. It’s not just any mixed-race person. At the very least, the 50% white blood must belong to a prestigious and historically significant family. Otherwise, it is absolutely not allowed.” charlie understood. It seemed the scholars of the Anti-Qing Society were no longer just of Chinese descent; they had even begun a global process of bloodline integration. Their biggest problem right now was that they hadn’t yet broken through the specific bloodline and identity requirements of the top elite circles in various countries. Once they broke through each level, they might one day, like the Jews, have the ability to influence the White House’s decisions and the direction of the entire United States. Thinking about it this way, Sara’s global network and influence across various regions and fields was far more extensive than charlie knew.

Completely intrigued, charlie immediately said to Steve, “How about this, you arrange a dinner tonight and invite your grand-nephew along. I’d like to get to know him.”

Steve instinctively replied, “Mr. wade, how could that little brat be worthy of dining with you? If you want to meet him, I’ll have him come and pay his respects to you.”

charlie said, “You’re talking too much nonsense. I have my reasons for wanting to meet him. Just make the arrangements. Also, remember to subtly ask him if he has a girlfriend. If so, bring her along.”

Steve’s eyes lit up, and he blurted out, “Mr. wade, you wouldn’t happen to have your eye on this kid’s girlfriend, would you?!”

charlie thought to himself that this old guy's mind was quite dirty, but he didn't explain further, only instructing him, "Do as I ask. Tonight I want to meet that Robert Rothschild and his girlfriend!"

Steve immediately said, "No problem, Mr. wade, don't worry, I'll arrange everything perfectly! If that kid dares to say a word against it, I'll slap his mouth shut!"

At this moment, Robert Rothschild, comforted by his girlfriend, seemed to be in much better spirits on the sidelines.

The coach blew the whistle, signaling the start of the second half of the match.

The tall, mixed-race girl smiled at Robert and said, "Go, Robert. Remember what I told you: adjust your tactics promptly and catch the opponent off guard. I'll be watching from the sidelines, and I'll give you hand signals when the time is right."

Encouraged, Robert nodded emphatically.

He already knew that his girlfriend was not only a top student but also an expert in various sports, especially rugby. Her judgment and understanding of the situation were arguably even better than the school coach's, and she often gave him excellent advice, which was one of the reasons he was so infatuated with her.

When the match resumed, Robert's performance on the field had indeed improved significantly. Even charlie wade, who didn't understand the rules, could see that his change made his team more flexible, mobile, and aggressive, giving them a clear advantage.

Meanwhile, Robert's girlfriend was constantly giving him subtle hand signals from the sidelines. Each time Robert saw her hints, he made precise adjustments, giving him a significant advantage in the game.

Ultimately, Robert's team easily won the match, and a confident smile returned to Robert's face.

After the match, Robert immediately went off the court and gently embraced his girlfriend. Overwhelmed with emotion, he tried to kiss her, but she subtly turned her head away, resting her chin on his shoulder and smiling, "Robert, I'm not ready to give you my first kiss yet. Give me a little more time."

Robert's expression clearly showed disappointment. Just as he was about to say something, his girlfriend continued in his ear, "You're covered in sweat. Go take a shower, change your clothes, and then we'll have dinner. I've made a reservation at Red Pepper Restaurant." Robert was a little taken aback and subconsciously asked, "How did you know I wanted to eat at this restaurant?"

His girlfriend smiled and said, "I didn't know you wanted to eat here; it was just that I wanted to, so I took the liberty of booking this restaurant."

Robert exclaimed in surprise, "Then we're on the same page! Wait a moment, I'm going to take a shower!"

"Okay, go ahead." His girlfriend nodded, patted Robert's arm, and Robert picked up his training bag and turned to walk towards the locker room.

The school team coach was already waiting on the way to the locker room. Seeing Robert approach, he walked with him, smiling and praising him, "Robert, you played exceptionally well in the second half. Your ability to read the game has improved significantly. Keep it up!"

Robert smiled and nodded.

As a member of the Rothschild family, he didn't need to flatter the coach, but hearing the coach's praise made him very happy, and his admiration for his girlfriend increased.

However, this girlfriend wasn't perfect in every way. The only thing he was dissatisfied with was the traditional Eastern value of chastity.

In the past, almost all of his girlfriends had thrown themselves at him, and he never had to take the initiative to have sex with them. Many of them even desperately wanted to have a child with Rothschild blood, so they tried every means to get him to not use contraception. But Robert knew very well that he could have some fun, but he would never let any woman use her unborn child to control him, so he never gave those women the chance to get pregnant.

But his current girlfriend is an anomaly.

Forget about throwing herself at him or climbing into his bed; she's only willing to hug and hold hands, refusing even the most basic kiss.

Robert initially thought she was playing hard to get, but he had a private investigator conduct a thorough background check. The investigator meticulously examined all of her records from kindergarten onwards, as well as her elementary and middle school social circles. The results showed that she had indeed been extremely self-disciplined from a young age, excelling academically and building a solid foundation in many sports, winning numerous important awards. Most importantly, she had never had a romantic relationship in the past twenty years. Those who knew her generally agreed that she had never been in a relationship, or even held hands with a boy. When these findings were presented to Robert, he was instantly captivated by this pure, exceptionally self-disciplined girl.

He felt that even if she was faking it in front of him, it was impossible for her to have maintained this facade for twenty years. Therefore, Robert concluded that this was simply her nature.

Little did he know, this was the scholar's strongest disguise.

Every scholar trained by the Breaking the Qing Society was a perfect work of art. From the day they were born, regardless of their true nature, they had to live according to the framework set by the Breaking the Qing Society. During their growth, they had to strive and work tirelessly; any laziness, disobedience, or developing feelings for someone else could put their entire family's life in danger.

Therefore, before being assigned an infiltration mission, every scholar's resume was spotless, impeccably clean. No one could find any flaws in them, so whoever investigated would only become more impressed and less guarded.

Robert, a womanizer, had never encountered such a perfect girl before, and he was instantly captivated. Even though she constantly teased him, he believed it was her true nature, and even if he wasn't happy, he had to understand and respect her.

At this moment, Robert, back in the lounge, took off his training clothes to shower when his Apple Watch suddenly beeped. During training, his phone was usually in a locker or training bag; he generally used his Apple Watch to make and receive calls. When he saw an unfamiliar number, he didn't think much of it and answered the call without hesitation.

A deep voice immediately came from the other end: "Robert, what are you doing?"

Robert asked, somewhat surprised, "Who is this?"

The other person immediately replied, "I am your grandfather's eldest brother, the sole heir of the Rothschild family, Steve Rothschild!"

Robert was startled. As a grandson of the Rothschild family, he had only recently started university and was far from being involved in family affairs. He rarely had the opportunity to meet Steve, and even when they did, they rarely exchanged a word. He was extremely surprised that Steve would call him himself.

Originally, his grandfather had been vying for the heirship, and at that time, the entire family was hostile towards Steve. But ever since the old man personally announced Steve as the legal heir, his grandfather immediately became obedient, desperately trying to curry favor with Steve, fearing that Steve would cause him trouble after succeeding to the throne, or even reduce the resources of his branch. However, Steve was petty and hostile towards his fourth brother, so naturally, he didn't give him any chance.

Therefore, Robert didn't understand why Steve, who couldn't even get close to his own grandfather, would suddenly call him.

Robert asked nervously, "Grandpa Steve, what can I do for you?"

Steve smiled and said, "I'm in Stanford on some business. I remember you were studying here, so I wanted to invite you out for dinner tonight!"

Robert never dreamed that Steve would actually invite him to dinner.

Steve had always been at odds with his grandfather, and after Robert was officially designated as the heir, his grandfather tried everything to ease the tension, but Robert never even answered the phone, let alone offered any opportunities.

Now, Steve was actually inviting him, a junior, to dinner—it all seemed like a fantasy.

Among the younger generation of the Rothschild family, Robert wasn't the most outstanding, but he was certainly the most self-aware. He knew he wasn't exceptional in any particular area; it was the Rothschild family's prestige that gave him a huge advantage. Therefore, he understood that someone as insignificant as him couldn't possibly be noticed by Steve.

However, even if he couldn't guess the reason, since Steve had invited him, he certainly couldn't refuse.

After all, Steve would be the future leader of the Rothschild family, and any opportunity to build a closer relationship with him shouldn't be missed.

So, almost without thinking, he immediately agreed, saying, "Okay, Grandpa Steve, where do you plan to dine? I'll pack up and head over right away!"

Steve smiled and said, "The family has a high-end club in the Bay Area, so why don't we dine there? You can arrive there in an hour." Robert knew about the club Steve mentioned. Although it was his grandfather's headquarters, the family also had many directly managed properties there. Even his grandfather didn't have management rights over these properties, so his family almost never went there unless someone from New York came.

Since Steve had already made the reservation, Robert, the younger generation, naturally had no objections. He quickly agreed, saying, "Okay, Grandpa Steve, I'll be right there."

Steve smiled and asked, "By the way, Robert, do you have a girlfriend at school?"

Robert was quite surprised, wondering why Steve was so concerned about him, but he still honestly replied, "I do have a girlfriend right now."

Steve readily laughed, “Good, then invite your girlfriend over.”

“Huh?” Robert was even more surprised and said somewhat nervously, “Grandpa Steve, we haven’t reached the stage of meeting each other’s parents yet.”

Steve casually said, “Oh, I’m not really your parent, so don’t feel pressured. Just bring her over, and introduce her to me as well. I also have some friends I want to introduce you to. You’re both young, so you should have more in common.”

Robert was completely bewildered. He couldn’t quite understand a word Steve said. He already thought it was outrageous that Steve invited him to dinner, let alone ask him to bring his girlfriend and introduce him to other young people. Did this old man have so much free time these days?

But since things had come to this point, he couldn’t refuse even if he wanted to, so he could only bite the bullet and say, “Okay, Grandpa Steve.”

Steve smiled and said, “Then you should prepare to go over now.”

“Okay.” Robert hung up the phone, a wave of doubt washing over him. He didn’t dare delay and quickly called his father. After all, Steve was the second-in-command of the family, and no matter what the other party’s intentions were, Robert had to inform his family first.

His father was also very surprised when he received the call. Steve and Robert’s grandfather had already broken off relations during their struggle for succession, but Robert’s grandfather ultimately lost. So even though he dreamed of improving relations with Steve, Steve had never given them any chance. He never expected that this time Steve would take the initiative to invite his grandchildren to dinner. This was indeed a bit puzzling, but for the family, it was an unexpected joy. After all, from complete hostility at the beginning to Steve now showing friendliness to their children, this in itself was progress.

So Robert's father instructed him to make a good impression on Steve, and if possible, to convey some goodwill messages from his grandfather, and ideally, to invite Steve to their home.

Robert felt a heavy responsibility on his shoulders and readily agreed without hesitation. He then walked out of the locker room and saw his girlfriend waiting for him outside.

She was standing there, not in the rest area, nor leaning against the wall playing on her phone; she stood there like a model, a constant smile on her face. Seeing Robert come out, she immediately rushed forward with delight, smiling and saying, "The changing time seems to be a bit faster today than before."

Robert nodded and said to her, "Catherine, if you don't have any other plans tonight, I'd like you to come with me to a dinner party." "A dinner party?" his girlfriend asked curiously. "Weren't we supposed to have dinner together? Why is there another dinner party all of a sudden?"

Robert shrugged helplessly and said, "My grandfather's older brother is here. He called and asked if I wanted to have dinner with him. He even asked if I had a girlfriend, and if so, to bring her along. You know, he's the heir to our family, and I wouldn't dare disobey him."

His girlfriend's pupils constricted sharply. Although she didn't show anything on the surface, her heart was in turmoil.

She was considered an "aristocrat" among scholars, not because her mixed-race blood was particularly noble, but because her lineage was the only one in the many years of the Qing Dynasty-Breaking Society to truly possess half of a Western aristocratic bloodline traceable in Western history. Unlike other scholars, she truly possessed a ticket to the upper-class white social circle.

Don't underestimate this half-Western aristocratic lineage. For non-white races, acquiring this bloodline is no easy feat. Despite the nominal openness of Western society, old money and aristocracy are very traditional. Many can tolerate consanguineous marriage but not interracial marriage. Her lineage, starting with her maternal grandmother, has been striving to integrate into Western aristocratic circles. Her grandmother successfully married a fallen nobleman who fled Europe to America. Her mother went a step further, marrying a well-known old money nobleman in America, though still far from the elite Rothschild family.

From a young age, she was expected to marry into one of the most prestigious Western families, undergoing intensive upbringing. When she was sixteen, her family, after careful evaluation, set Robert Rothschild as her target. That's why she applied to Stanford University with a near-perfect resume, then began to present herself in the best possible light to Robert, successfully winning his heart.

On the day she and Robert confirmed their relationship, her family reported the news to the Left Army Governor's Office. The Left Army Governor's Office immediately relayed the good news to Wu Feiyan, who even personally rewarded her and her family, promising them maximum freedom should she successfully marry into the Rothschild family. The whole family was thrilled and full of anticipation.

However, she knew very well that whether she could marry into the Rothschild family depended on Robert's parents and grandparents, not Robert himself. Therefore, she had always hoped that Robert would take her to meet his family. But she never expected that day to come so soon, and even more unexpectedly, the person she was to meet this time was not Robert's parents, but the second most important person in the entire Rothschild family, Steve Rothschild!
