Chapter 8011

6-7 minutes

The name of the leader has always been a top secret. Most members of the Anti-Qing Society, even the middle-level members, have no idea who the leader is, or whether the leader is male or female. The leader even uses a voice changer when issuing orders, making it difficult to distinguish between male and female. She happened to know the name Sara because her maternal grandmother's younger sister had an affair with a member of the Wu family from the Left Army Governor's Mansion when she was young. She heard the name Sara and her story from the Wu family's bedside. Otherwise, even if Charlie Wade said the name Sara, she would be completely confused.

Charlie Wade noticed Rachel's shock and smiled, saying, "You don't need to be so surprised. Although I've never met Sara, I know she's lived for over four hundred years and is the founder and sole leader of the Breaking the Qing Society."

Rachel, still shaken, looked at Charlie Wade and said, "Mr. Wade, you probably know more about the Breaking the Qing Society than I do..."

Charlie Wade waved his hand dismissively, saying, "You don't need to be so modest. I only know about Sara's background. I know nothing about the Left Army Governor's Office. I had Steve invite you here to ask you about the Left Army Governor's Office."

Rachel pursed her lips, embarrassed, and said, "To be honest..." "...I don't know much about the Left Army Commandery either. After all, the scholars are an outsider to the core structure. We scholars are like satellites they've scattered across the land. They know everything about us, but we know very little about them."

Charlie Wade asked her, "Do people from the Left Army Commandery have direct contact with you?"

Rachel shook her head: "No, at least not with me. At most, in the event of a major or emergency, the Left Army Commandery will send a deputy to deliver instructions. And these people are highly skilled and elusive; we don't know who they are, where they come from, or where they're going."

“A deputy?”

charlie wade raised an eyebrow, unconsciously thinking of Song Ruyu.

Song Ruyu was a deputy in the Right Army Commandery, which should be considered mid-to-high-level management within the Commandery.

So charlie wade asked Rachel, “Have you ever met a deputy in the Commandery?”

Rachel truthfully replied, “I met one.”
charlie wade asked again, “Why did the Vice Commissioner come over that time?”

Rachel replied, “That time it was because the Left Army Governor’s Office had a business related to oil, and the Governor’s Office hoped that my mother could help connect with the Getty family.”

“Business matters?” charlie wade wondered, and couldn’t help but ask, “The Po Qing Society shouldn’t be so abrupt, right? Having your mother act as an intermediary to do business with your father’s family—isn’t that tantamount to exposing their own businesses?”

Rachel explained, “That incident was rather special. The Left Army Governor’s Office had a batch of crude oil from its shale oil fields in America that they wanted to sell through the Getty family’s channels. They specifically requested that it not be sold publicly; the crude oil be mixed into the Getty family’s inventory, sold together with the Getty family, and then settled in cash with the Left Army Governor’s Office’s contact person after the Getty family paid the taxes. The total amount was approximately one hundred million US dollars.”

charlie wade frowned slightly, then relaxed, and smiled at Lin Wan’er (Alani), “It seems the Left Army Governor’s Office also has its own selfish motives.”

Lin Wan’er (Alani) smiled and nodded, saying, “It seems that the oil fields under the Left Army Governor’s Office concealed a portion of their production from Sara, and then secretly sold this concealed crude oil through the Getty family’s channels.” “It’s been exchanged for money.”

charlie wade nodded and smiled, “Anyone capable of doing something like this must be a member of the Wu family, possibly even a high-ranking member of the Governor’s Office.”

He then murmured with some doubt, “The Five Military Governor’s Offices each control a large number of elite guard positions, and these should all be large industrial and mining enterprises with extremely low labor costs. Logically, each Governor's Office should have a very large income, possibly hundreds of billions of US dollars a year. As members of the Wu family and high-ranking officials of the Qing-Breaking Society, Sara wouldn't treat them unfairly. Why risk such a small amount of money?"

Lin Wan'er (Alani) shook her head and smiled, "Brother, think about it. The Left Army Governor's Office in North America, this rich land, must have many profitable businesses. Shale oil alone could rake in a hundred million US dollars in extra income. If every business were handled the same way, that would be hundreds of millions, even billions of US dollars in net income a year. And all of this is tax-free and can be pocketed."

"Although the Breaking the Qing Society has a large number of assassins and high income, the amount of funds needed to maintain the operation of the various governor's offices and headquarters is astronomical. Moreover, there are countless scholar families scattered all over the world. In order to enable them to receive the best education and access the highest level of society, the funds that the Breaking the Qing Society needs to provide for them are probably also enormous. So, the amount of money left for the Grand Governor and his family each year is probably not very high. Everyone has selfish desires, and it is normal for some people to want to get more money in their hands."

Lin Wan'er (Alani)'s prediction about the Five Armies Commandery was accurate.

In fact, despite all being of Wu family blood, the Five Armies Commandery, like the emperor's five sons, each had their own vast families and territories. Moreover, their loyalty to the emperor was even less than that of those outside the imperial family.

In the environment of feudal imperial families, there were very few filial and sentimental sons. The strongest competition was always between sons, and between sons and fathers, it was always a structure where the son only had a chance to rise to power after the father's death. Like the Rothschild family, Steve's feelings for his biological father were certainly less than those for the high-ranking officials under his father, because the high-ranking officials relied on his father for their livelihood, while he hoped his father would die soon.

The commanders of the Five Armies Commandery and their families were essentially following the same logic.

Sara had less than a hundred years left to live, and every commander of the Five Armies Commandery had to consider one question: what would happen after Sara died?

There are two ways to solve this problem, which can be divided into A and B.

Option A is that Sara appoints a successor capable of leading the entire Anti-Qing Society.

This situation leads to two possibilities: the first is A1, where the commanders of the Five Military Commands remain hereditary and each continues to serve as their own feudal lords; the second is A2, where the new lord, to increase control, replaces the entire Five Military Commands. If it

's A1, all will be well. But if it's A2, the current commanders must either obediently relinquish their positions or fight their way out, but the chances of winning are slim unless the Five Military Commands cooperate. Otherwise, any mutiny by one of them could be crushed by the other four.

Besides the two possibilities below option A, there is also option B. Option B is that Sara's chosen successor is incapable of leading the entire Anti-Qing Society, or is not a threat to the commanders of the Five Military Commands.

This leads to two possible outcomes: B1, a leader emerges from within the Five Military Commands to achieve unification; B2, the Five Military Commands directly secede from the Anti-Qing Society, declaring, "I don't care who the leader is; everything on my territory belongs to me, and the leader's words are meaningless."

Of these four possibilities (A1, A2, B1, B2), A1, where everything remains unchanged, only has a 25% probability. The remaining 75% is highly uncertain for all of them.

Therefore, there is a 75% chance that the future will undergo significant changes.

To cope with such changes, the Five Military Commands are secretly pursuing their own schemes, the simplest and most direct being internal corruption.

They are doing everything possible to accumulate enormous wealth for their families over the next hundred years, ensuring they can cope with whatever happens in the future.

If they were forced to relinquish the Five Military Commands, they possessed a vast fortune enough to ensure their descendants a life of comfort. If they were to fight a decisive battle, the more money they had, the greater their chances of victory.

Ultimately, it all came down to the old adage: “Dig deep tunnels, store ample grain, and delay declaring yourself king.”

The Left Military Command had many other businesses operating behind Sara’s back; shale oil was just one of them.

However, this also gave charlie wade a great opportunity.

charlie wade frowned and said, “The Strait of Hormuz has been unstable recently, and oil prices have risen so sharply. If I were someone from the Left Army Governor’s Office, and I had stockpiled oil, I would also look for an opportunity to sell it now. This is a good time to set up a scheme.”

After saying that, he looked at Rachel and reminded her, “I can have the Rothschild family try to manipulate the oil prices in the United States to create a short-term surge. If nothing unexpected happens, the Left Army Governor’s Office should seize this opportunity to release another batch of crude oil. Then, take Robert home for the next couple of days. Tell him you’re bringing Robert home as a guest and to meet your parents. If the Left Army Governor’s Office’s clerk comes to the door, tell me immediately.”

Rachel said somewhat nervously, “Mr. wade, if I become your mole, once the Qing Dynasty finds out, my entire family for three generations will probably be doomed...”

charlie wade looked at her and asked, “If not...” “Do you think cooperating with me will save your three generations?”

Rachel shook her head frantically, saying, “I...I didn’t mean that...I’m afraid that if you take action against the Left Army Governor’s Mansion, the Qing Society’s investigation will trace it back to us.”

charlie wade looked at her and said very seriously, "I can get Steve Rothschild to provide you with many conveniences in the future, giving you many buffs that you could only dream of. This will make you a hot new star in the Qing Society, and will greatly improve your and your family's situation. In addition, you don't have to worry about leaks if you cooperate with me. I'm always cautious and won't leave any clues. Besides, even if I take down the entire Left Army Governor's Mansion through you, Sara won't think that you or your family leaked the secret."

Rachel suddenly paused, then realized that charlie wade was telling the truth.

Scholar families have a very low status in the Qing Society.

They are forever isolated from the core circle, forever just pawns. The Left Army Commander's Office wouldn't normally have any substantial contact with him, at most issuing orders through one-way channels. Their current illegal contact with Rachel's family is for ulterior motives, so they'll likely handle the situation meticulously. This is the best possible outcome for charlie wade—it's like the person he wants to kill has prepared a body bag for him, evaded surveillance, erased all clues, and personally delivered themselves to their doom.

What can he say? Of course, he'll gladly accept it!

Once Rachel understood this, she immediately realized that charlie wade was not only her only way out but could also become a major asset. If she could gain the Rothschild family's resources and approval, her status within the Qing Dynasty would rise significantly, benefiting her entire family.

She had previously harbored concerns about Robert, and her reluctance to give him her body stemmed from the fear that if Robert took her and then didn't want to marry her, she would be completely discarded.

Even if she could be certain that Robert genuinely loved her, she couldn't guarantee his family's approval, nor could she be sure that Robert would defy their objections and marry her.

Furthermore, she couldn't be certain that if Robert went against his family's wishes and insisted on marrying her, would they abandon him, like the British prince who was stripped of his royal status and reduced to a commoner, whose wife would naturally never become a princess?

To improve her own standing, she not only needed to marry Robert but also enter his family; both were indispensable, making the situation extremely unpredictable.

However, with Charlie Wade's help, this would be a piece of cake.

After all, even Steve was so respectful to Charlie Wade; if Charlie Wade supported her, Robert's parents would probably be begging her to marry into their family!

Having grasped the situation, Rachel immediately declared to Charlie Wade, "Mr. Wade, rest assured, whatever your arrangements, I will do my utmost without hesitation!"

Charlie Wade nodded and smiled, saying, "Cooperating with me will not only benefit your entire family, but also grant you true freedom after the collapse of the Po Qing Society."

Rachel's expression hardened; she realized that Charlie Wade's true purpose was to make an enemy of the entire Po Qing Society.

If Charlie Wade had said this a few minutes earlier, she probably wouldn't have believed it, thinking he was a madman indulging in wishful thinking.

But at this moment, seeing Charlie Wade's confident and calm expression, Rachel immediately felt that Charlie Wade might actually be able to accomplish this.

So she said respectfully, "Mr. Wade, our scholar family has been enslaved and driven by the Anti-Qing Society for centuries. The greatest dream of every generation is to fight for freedom for themselves and their descendants. If you can truly grant us freedom, we will be eternally grateful for your kindness!"

Charlie Wade nodded and said calmly, "Since you trust me, let's talk about something practical. You went out to dinner with the second-in-command of the Rothschild family today; I presume you've already reported it to your family?"

Rachel nodded and said, "That's right, Mr. Wade. I called my family to report it before I left."

charlie wade pressed, "And what was their reaction?" Rachel truthfully replied, "My family is overjoyed. They feel this is a huge step forward for the entire family. My mother even wants to tell the Left Army Commander's Office."

"Oh?" charlie wade asked with a smile, "So, your mother has the Left Army Commander's Office's contact information, right?"

"Yes." Rachel nodded, "We have a designated contact person. If there's a major emergency, we can contact that person through special channels."

charlie wade smiled and said, "That's great. Today is a huge step forward for you. Your mother will definitely want to report this news to the Left Army Commander's Office as soon as possible. I suppose the Left Army Commander's Office already knows you met with Steve. I guess they'll be very interested in the details of this meeting, and might even ask you to report the details tonight."

Rachel nodded, "That's probably it. They've always been very concerned about my progress with Robert. I even write a love diary for them every day so they know my progress with Robert, and they give me a lot of advice and requests."

charlie wade smiled mysteriously and said inscrutably, "Then you..." "When you get back today, you can tell them some of the 'rumors' you heard at the dinner table."

Rachel hurriedly asked charlie wade, "Mr. wade, what rumors are you talking about?"

charlie wade smiled and said, "Just say that when Steve was chatting with Robert, he casually mentioned that the Rothschild family is planning to have the President of the United States continue to escalate the situation in the Strait of Hormuz, hoping to further drive up oil prices by escalating the situation in the Strait of Hormuz. As for their purpose in doing so, it is mainly to push oil prices to a new high, and then take the opportunity to sell off their holdings. After this wave of price increases has passed, they will push for bilateral peace talks in the Strait of Hormuz. At that time, the policy will loosen, and oil prices will plummet. The Rothschild family is preparing to suspend sales during the oil price crash and stockpile oil to prepare for the next peak."

As he spoke, charlie wade added, "This will give them a sense of urgency that the market is about to peak. If they have crude oil in hand, they will definitely try every means to seize this opportunity to sell. At that time, they will inevitably send their envoys to meet with you again."

Originally, charlie wade thought of having the Rothschild family manipulate crude oil prices to drive them up first, and then attract the Left Army Governor's Office to intervene.

However, upon closer examination, he realized that raising prices takes time and wouldn't be effective enough.

Since his goal was to lure the enemy out, he didn't necessarily need to actually throw out bait. Creating a decoy would be faster than preparing a real one.

Moreover, everyone in business is obsessed with insider trading, from small-time stock market investors to CEOs of listed companies, private equity fund managers, and even giant conglomerates. Receiving an accurate signal in advance could potentially generate hundreds of millions or even billions of dollars in profit. If Rachel heard the information from the Rothschild family heir, it would be highly credible to the Left Army Governor's Office.

Moreover, this rhetoric would create a sense of urgency for them, implying that the market opportunity could arise at any moment and be fleeting. If they were even slightly slow, they would miss the chance and be forced to sell at a low price.

Crude oil is unlike other commodities; it cannot be stockpiled in large quantities, especially since they were underreporting their production. Stockpiling would be even more difficult, so they would definitely seize this opportunity to sell quickly, the faster the better. Perhaps if the information was given out tonight, the other party would take action before dawn.

Rachel nodded without hesitation and said, "Yes, Mr. wade, don't worry, I will report to the Left Army Commander's Office as you instructed when I get back today."

Lin Wan'er (Alani), standing nearby, asked charlie wade, "Brother, what if the Left Army Commander's Office finds out it was fake news later? Will they become suspicious?" charlie wade glanced at Rachel across from him. Although Rachel's expression showed some tension, she was clearly restraining herself. She was probably also worried about repercussions from the Left Army Commander's Mansion. Even if he could use excuses like the Rothschild family changing their minds at the last minute to cover it up, the fact remained:

his information was inaccurate, and the Left Army Commander's Mansion would definitely hold a grudge against him.

However, she also had her own thoughts. She felt that she had just promised charlie wade to be obedient to him, and if she immediately showed worry or anxiety, it would definitely lower charlie wade's impression of her.

charlie wade, reminded by Lin Wan'er (Alani), was also considering this issue.

His main motivation was to use this false information to lure the Left Army Commander's Mansion out. If things went according to plan, this goal would definitely be achieved. However, Lin Wan'er (Alani)'s words made him realize that if he could handle this matter better, it would have a better long-tail effect.

In other words, he not only needed to lure the snake out of its hole, but he also needed to make sure the snake actually took the bait.

In this way, Rachel's influence and credibility would be even greater in front of the Left Army Commander-in-Chief's Office, which would definitely be beneficial in the future.

Thinking of this, charlie wade smiled and said, "It just so happens that the heir of the Rothschild family is here. This time, let's test Steve's capabilities and see if he can, as I request, secretly influence the situation in the Strait of Hormuz to raise oil prices!"
