

THE BREAKING POINT OF LOVE

Chapter 548

Xavier had seen it too. But both of them only caught a glimpse of the woman's back. They didn't see the face clearly. 4

Even so, Jorge instinctively assumed the figure was Wynn. After all, Wynn was indeed very close to Trevor's daughter. 2

After glancing a few more times and seeing Jordyn happily throw herself into that person's arms, he didn't look again

Turning to Xavier, he said, "Let's go." 4

Xavier had also assumed that person was Wynn. Hearing Jorge say that, he was a little surprised. "You're not going to say hi?"

Jorge didn't explain. He simply said, "Let's go," in a calm tone. 2

And so, they left.

On the other side, Celeste hadn't noticed them at all. 1

Meanwhile, at the Locket residence, it was already five in the afternoon.

Wynn picked up her phone and called Trevor, wanting to ask him out for dinner. The call went through, but no one answered.

20 minutes passed, and there was still no reply. She held the phone in silence for a while, then put it down without calling

After a moment, she went downstairs to get something to drink
Just as she reached downstairs, Lilian and Erin happened to return from their outing.

Wynn greeted them. "You're back."

Lilian hummed a response while setting her bag down, then noticed Wynn was still wearing the same casual pajamas from that morning.

"You've been home all day? Not going out?"

"No." 1

Neither Lilian nor Erin paid much attention to the fact that they had run into Celeste and Trevor at the restaurant earlier.

They had simply assumed the three of them had gone out to eat, together and naturally figured Wynn must already know.

So, they didn't mention it in front of her.

Still, seeing her daughter bored and alone at home—clearly in a low mood—Lilian couldn't help but think of that family-of-three

Her heart ached alittle for Wynn. 2

But she didn't press the topic. Instead, she gently patted her daughter's shoulders and comforted her softly, "Just give it a little more time. Things will get better."

Once Trevor and Celeste officially divorced, Lilian thought, even if they had a child together, there'd be no more reason for them to see each other privately. ©

Wynn thought her mother was referring to the divorce, which, admittedly, was weighing heavily on her mind these days. 1

She didn't say much, just answered quietly, "Mm."

When she went back upstairs and saw that Trevor still hadn't replied, she hesitated for a while and then couldn't help calling him again.

Still no answer.

After a pause, she called Jordyn. But Jordyn didn't pick up either.

At that very moment, Celeste and Trevor were still busy with the winemaking. Afterward, they stayed for dinner at the orchard.

Jordyn had had a wonderful day.

There were plenty of fun activities around the orchard, and she was eager to stay overnight, especially after hearing that the stars would be especially bright tonight.

She wanted to stay and watch them from the rooftop.

However, Celeste didn't want to stay. "I didn't bring any change of clothes," she said. "Next time."

But Trevor spoke up before she could end the discussion. "If you need clothes, Peter can prepare some."

"Yeah!" Jordyn chimed in quickly, eyes shining. "Dad and I didn't bring any either, but someone can get them for us—it's really

Celeste couldn't say anything. She glanced at Trevor, frowning slightly. 2

Trevor poured her a glass of water and said with a faint smile, "You've been busy with work lately, haven't you? Why not take this chance to relax a bit?" 17

Celeste frowned again. 5

Was that really the issue here? 10
