

The Breaking Point of Love c 5

Matthias first handed his phone to his secretary.

Then he looked at Quentin as though he had just heard the most ridiculous joke. "Mr. Yallop, you're overthinking this. Just because the woman you admire happens to be despicable, you think everyone else is just like her?"

Hearing Matthias openly disparage Wynn, Quentin finally snapped back to reality. "You"

Matthias had no interest in hearing him out.

He cut him off and suddenly said, "You just said that you and Ms. Locket both joined YodaVision because of our Cuap programming language, right? A lot of people assume I developed Cuap myself, but I believe I already told you back then that it wasn't my work."

Quentin froze. "Yes, you did..."

He couldn't understand why Matthias had suddenly brought this up. Then a thought flashed through his mind.

In an instant, he understood what Matthias was getting at. His eyes widened in shock as he looked between Matthias and Celeste.

"Y-You mean..."

Everyone in the industry knew about YodaVision's programming language, Cuap. So, hearing Matthias suddenly bring it up and openly state that he wasn't its creator, many of the industry insiders immediately understood what he meant.

They, including Philip, turned toward Celeste in utter disbelief.

Kieran was equally stunned.

He had also joined YodaVision because of Cuap. Given how recently Celeste had joined the company, even after learning just how capable she actually was, he had never once considered the possibility that Cuap had been developed by her.

But now that he understood what Matthias was implying, excitement filled his eyes as he looked at Celeste.

Lilian and Harvey weren't industry insiders, but because of Wynn, they knew just how influential and valuable Cuap was within the field.

So naturally, they too understood what Matthias was implying. Lilian looked up in shock while Harvey was equally stunned.

If Cuap had really been developed by Celeste, just how incredible was her ability?

Under everyone's attention, Matthias finally said, "Yes. The creator of Cuap is Cel."

Quentin's face instantly went pale,

He stared at Celeste in disbelief

"How is that possible? She only joined Yodavision a year ago How could Cuap possibly have been-"

Others had thought of the same thing.

But Matthias didn't waste time explaining. He simply presented the evidence.

He looked towards the large screen.

The intimate photos of Celeste and Trevor were no longer displayed.

Quentin also realised what was happening and turned towards the screen behind him.

Matthias said calmly, "The copyright registration certificate, the Git timestamp records, the trademark registration-they're all right here.

"Mr. Yallop, if you still think that's not enough to prove that Cel is the creator of Cuap, tell me what else you need. I'll do my best to provide it."

Quentin stared blankly at the screen. For once, he was completely speechless.

The others began whispering among themselves.

"She developed a programming language that advanced more than ten years ago? She would've only been around 16 or 17 back then!"

"Holy crap. That's insane!"

"Yeah!"

The moment Matthias had suddenly shifted the conversation to

YodaVision's programming

language, Wynn had immediatet guessed what he was about to reveal.

She had known for a long time that Celeste was Zachary's student and the founder of YodaVision.

After learning those two identities, she had actually wondered whether Cuap might have been developed by Celeste herself She simply didn't dare to take that thought any further. But now...

She clenched her hands tightly.

As the crowd's astonished exclamations filled the room, she kept her head lowered and didn't dare look up.