

The Breaking Point of Love

Chapter 842

Hannah had already guessed that Wynn might try calling Jordyn. And when she called, Jordyn happened to be taking a shower.

Hannah simply hung up on Wynn's call.

When Wynn saw that Jordyn wasn't answering, she sent a message. "Jo, I came to see you. Could you come downstairs and open the door for me?"

Hannah saw the message and casually deleted it. She waited a little longer and finally relaxed when Wynn didn't call again.

Wynn waited for a while, but when there was still no response from Jordyn, she pressed her lips together. She continued waiting there for a long time.

It was almost midnight when she checked the time, yet she still hadn't seen Trevor's car. This time, she didn't wait any longer and drove away.

When she returned home, Harvey and the rest of the family were still awake, all of them waiting for news from her. Linda was the first to stand up the moment she walked in.

"Wynn-"

Wynn didn't look at her. Instead, she looked at everyone else who had turned toward her, then slowly shook her head.

Harvey, Lilian, and the others felt their hearts sink.

Linda understood immediately. "Wynn, you... still didn't get to see him?"

They all knew that Wynn had been trying to find a way to see Trevor the past couple of days. But none of them had expected that after contacting him so many times and waiting outside his home on so many occasions, she still hadn't managed to see him.

At this point, even Linda understood. "Is he... avoiding you?"

If even she could figure it out, how could the others not?

They could understand if Trevor was frustrated and wanted some time alone, and didn't want to see Wynn. Once the heat died down, they believed the two of them would soon make up and return to the way things were.

Considering that Trevor hadn't broken up with Wynn, yet also refused to see her, this was most likely what was happening.

If nothing had happened to their companies, they could naturally afford to wait patiently. But now that the companies were facing such serious problems—

At that moment, Calvin came downstairs. "Why is everyone still awake this late?"

He was genuinely surprised to see everyone in the living room. He looked at Wynn and couldn't resist teasing her. "Wynn, you're back? You were gone so late that I thought you were going to spend another night away from home!"

When Wynn hadn't returned the previous night, he'd assumed she'd gone out with Trevor.

Wynn wasn't in the mood for jokes. "School starts in a few days. Go to bed early."

"I will." Calvin yawned, grabbed a bottle of milk, and headed upstairs.

As soon as he reached his room, he saw someone sending messages in his class group chat. He immediately became interested after reading them.

He happily tagged the two classmates who had just been chatting. "You guys are going hiking? I've been bored to death since coming back to the country these past few days. Take me with you!"

After he sent the message, the group suddenly went silent.

He was stunned, then tagged them again. "What's going on? Did you guys seriously go to sleep right after I showed up?"

Still no response. Were they really asleep?

Just as he was thinking that, one of them finally replied. "Sorry, we've already got enough people."

Calvin immediately perked up. He replied, "What's that supposed to mean? How can there ever be too many people for a hike? I'm seriously so bored at home right now. Let me come too. We classmates, aren't we? Just say yes!"

No reply.

Then, another classmate suddenly appeared. "We said we've got enough people.

Do you not understand us? Or is everyone from a mistress's family just this shameless?"

Calvin stared at the message, completely stunned.
