The Breaking Point of Love

Chapter 862

Trevor walked over to Philip amid the quiet murmuring around them.

"Mr. Lancaster."

Beck and Miles greeted Philip as well.

Philip acknowledged them, shot Trevor a sidelong glance, then looked toward Celeste's side of the hall.

"You don't know a gem when you see one. Do you really don't feel even the slightest regret?"

Trevor didn't look towards Celeste. Instead, he changed the subject. "I thought you'd be more interested in the project I discussed with you last time."

Philip fell silent. He was, in fact, interested in the project.

Since Trevor clearly had no intention of discussing his relationship with Celeste, Philip couldn't be bothered to pry. After all, the romantic entanglements of young people had little to do with him. He simply found it frustrating and regrettable that someone as outstanding as Celeste had failed to catch Trevor's eye.

So, he dropped the subject of Celeste and Trevor and began discussing the project with him instead.

Beck and Miles couldn't contribute much to their conversation, so after greeting Philip, they moved away.

Miles glanced toward Celeste.

Remembering how Trevor had seemed reluctant to discuss her just moments earlier, he hesitated before saying, "Celeste really is outstanding in every respect. If she truly wasn't the one who drugged Trevor back then, she'd actually be a pretty good match for him."

A far better match than Wynn.

Miles had never thought much of the Shaw family's character. As for Wynn, now that he knew more about her background, he couldn't help wondering whether she had deliberately engineered her initial encounter with Trevor.

Unfortunately, Trevor was simply too attached to Wynn.

Even though he knew about the history between Wynn and Celeste, he had never told Miles or Beck about it. And over the years, he had consistently ignored the objections of his own family.

Trevor's feelings for Wynn ran so deep that even now, despite Miles's growing dislike of her, he had never once criticised Wynn in front of Trevor since Philip's banquet.

But just because he refrained from speaking ill of her in front of Trevor didn't mean he wasn't worried.

Beck slowed his steps when he heard this, but said nothing. He knew perfectly well that Trevor and Celeste had indeed been well suite to each other. He just didn't know whether Trevor had always been aware of how capable Celeste was.

He had actually wondered whether Trevor might see Celeste differently if he had previously underestimated her capabilities and only recently discovered what she was capable of.

That was why, over the past few weeks, he had specifically asked someone to keep an eye on Trevor's attitude towards Celeste. However, it seemed that there be

been no

ween no

noticeable change before or after

Philip's banquet.

And just now, when Philip brought up Celeste, Trevor had once again avoided the subject.

So, Beck had to admit that confirming Trevor had no romantic feelings for Celeste did make him happy.

Seeing him fall silent, Miles patted him on the shoulder. "Beck? What are you thinking about?"

Beck snapped back from his reverie. "Nothing."

"Do you think we should still try talking to Trevor about Wynn?"

"Let's find a suitable opportunity and talk to him another day." Beck knew Trevor had always been a man with a mind at his own. Onge he made up his mind, it was nearly impossible for anyone else to change it.

That was precisely why he and Miles hadn't tried to persuade him after Philip's banquet.

Furthermore, this was a decision that would affect the rest of Trevor's life.

As for Wynn, there was a real possibility that she had approached him with ulterior motives from the very beginning.

When it came to Trevor's happiness, they wanted him to think carefully before making any decision.
