The Breaking Point of Love

Chapter 870

After the plane landed, Wynn switched on her phone and checked it. Trevor still hadn't replied to her message.

She and Conrad had no further interaction. Once they got off the plane, they went their separate ways.

When the Lockets and Shaws learned that Wynn hadn't managed to see Trevor, they were all rather disappointed. What made them even more anxious, however, was the fact that the trial between Locket Tech and Velotra was only a few days away.

Linda felt a sinking feeling in her heart and couldn't help asking, "Wynn, do you think Trev will come back for the trial?"

Wynn replied, "...I don't know."

A few more days passed in the blink of an eye, and the trial between Locket Tech and Velotra finally began.

Celeste and the others had returned from their trip two days before the trial. On the day of the hearing, she and Matthias went to YodaVision as usual.

Matthias sat on the sofa and rubbed his chin as he spoke to Celeste. "The trial between Locket Tech and Velotra is today. Trevor... surely won't show up, will he?"

Although the attention online surrounding Celeste, Trevor, and Wynn had long since died down, people in their social circle were still keeping a close eye on Trevor's every move.

Surely he wouldn't take that kind of risk, would he?

Celeste shook her head. "I don't know."

Meanwhile, outside the courtroom, Wynn and the others had just arrived when they spotted Beck and Miles.

Wynn was taken aback. The other members of the Lockets and Shaws were delighted to see them.

Beck and Miles walked over.

"Trevor is still out of town dealing with some matters. He won't be back until tomorrow. Beck and I are here to show our support," Miles explained.

Beck nodded but said nothing.

Miles mentioned that Lincoln's political opponents were still keeping an eye on Trevor. Although he said Trevor was still away on business, Harvey and the rest understood that even if frevor were in Baumond, he wouldn't possibly show up here today.

They understood the situation, but they were still a little disappointed. They had genuinely hoped Trevor might make an appearance, even if discreetly.

Still, the fact that he had sent Beck and Miles to support them was enough to put Harvey and the others somewhat at ease.

The hearing began on time. Wynn, Beck and Miles sat in the public gallery to observe the proceedings. After taking their seats, however, none of the three spoke.

In truth, Miles had no idea how to interact with Wynn anymore. As for the other members of the Lockets and Shaws, he had no desire to make conversation with them either.

Although he had shown up in person, his brows remained furrowed.

Miles sat between Wynn and Beck. Since Miles said nothing, Beck naturally remained silent as well.

In fact, Beck had barely said a word to anyone since their initial encounter with the Lockets and Shaws.

Miles didn't find this strange. He assumed Beck, like himself, looked down on Wynn and the Lockets and Shows because of their conduct. He probably felt the same way but was only there out of loyalty to his friendship with Trevor.

The Lockets and Shaws hadn't seen Miles or Beck since Philip's banquet. So, Linda stole a glance at Beck. Seeing his cold, distant expression and how he didn't even turto look at her, disappointment filled ber eyes.

Wynn could naturally sense the coldness from both Miles and Beck. And she understood the reason perfectly well.

She tightened her grip on her handbag but kept her feelings off her face. Instead, she smiled and said, "Thank you both for coming."
