

Chapter 57 A Domineering Woman

Lucinda's cold and contemptuous glare frightened Sallie.

Before she could say anything, Lucinda took out her phone and read slowly, "Sallie Bryant, an ordinary employee who has been working in Cloudset Group for five years. You have cheated on your boyfriend many times with several men. You even hooked up with many clients during business trips and social engagements. Wow! You're something else!"

Sallie swallowed nervously, her arrogance dropping by the second.

"You have no evidence of what you're saying. This is slander! I will sue you!"

"Be patient, I'm not done yet."

Lucinda smiled at her and continued reading. "You embezzled more than twenty thousand dollars. This isn't very surprising though. It turns out that you never broke that nasty habit of yours after leaving the orphanage.

It's true that your crime isn't serious enough for you to go to jail, but what will happen if your company finds out?"

Lucinda deliberately paused with a bright smile.

Sallie held her breath, as though actually in suspense of what she was going to say.

"I think your company is going to fire you, right? I also wonder if other companies in the industry will blacklist you once they find out about it too."

Done reading, Lucinda put her phone away and looked at Sallie's angry face with no care in the world.

"Where is the evidence?" Sallie shouted.

"You're just so good at making up stories. I almost believed you myself. But if you have no evidence, then what you are saying is all bullshit!"

As if on cue, Sallie's phone rang just as she finished speaking.

Lucinda winked at her and said in a sing-song voice, "Here comes the evidence."

Sallie could barely hold her phone in her trembling hands. She pressed the answer button on the screen and brought it to her ear.

Before she could say hello to her leader, he scolded angrily, "How dare you! I thought you were a good worker and an honest woman.

I know all the bad things you've done. You ungrateful whore! Trust me, it's over for you!"

"No, please let me explain..."

Sallie's eyes were filled with tears as she explained anxiously, "Someone set me up, sir. Please, trust me!"

"Set you up? Do you really think I'm stupid?"

The man was so angry. "Get your ass to the company right this instant. I'd like to see how you deny the evidence."

Sallie opened her mouth to plead her case again, but the man had already hung up.

Sallie's phone dropped to the ground. She looked at Lucinda now with pleading eyes, all the disdain from earlier gone.

Within half an hour, Lucinda had become the boss of all the car dealerships in this area and had found all the detailed information about her and Jax when they quarrelled.

Sallie was finally realizing that this woman was terrifying.

"Who... Who the hell are you?"

She stared at Lucinda in shock, while Lucinda just smiled arrogantly at her. She was standing, but her noble aura was hard to ignore.

Sallie realized at that moment that Lucinda was not just an orphan who got divorced later in life. She was something more.

"Lucinda... Please, forgive me,"

Sallie cried, looking all humble now.

"I can't afford to lose this job. Please let me go, I beg of you."

Lucinda just watched her cry and plead, her face devoid of any emotion.

"I should have never humiliated you, I know that now. For the sake of our friendship in the past for so many years, please spare me. I can't lose this job and lose my place in this industry."

She kept bowing and crying to Lucinda.

It was as though she was a different person from the arrogant woman of earlier.

Lucinda's silence only made her panic more. She knelt down and grovelled.

"Lucinda, I know I was wrong. I'm sorry. Please let me go. I know you are a generous person. Please forgive me and help fix this."

"Are you done?"

Lucinda finally said and walked to stand in front of her. Then she held Sallie's chin and forced her to look up at her. "You're wrong. I'm never generous and I'm actually a vengeful person. I gave you a chance but you didn't take it."

She roughly let Sallie's chin go, took out a piece of tissue from her bag and wiped her hands.

"See her out," she ordered. "From now on, these two people are not allowed to come back here again."

The general manager walked up to the guards and said loudly, "Are you deaf? Didn't you hear what she said? Get them out of here right now!"

Several security guards rushed over with mops and waved them at the couple to drive them out.

Like two rats, Jax and Sallie were drive away.

Satisfied with how that went, Lucinda turned around and went back to the Volkswagen shop.

The manager followed her and tried to suck up to her.

"Madam, do you need me to walk you around this place? Since you just bought this place, I'm sure you don't know much about this industry..."

"No thanks. I have a plan of my own,"

Lucinda said coldly and cast him a sidelong glance that warned him to stay quiet.

"You're right. I shouldn't be so eager."

The general manager forced a smile and hit his mouth two times, beating himself up. He was too scared of saying anything that could get him fired.

She stopped in front of a Volkswagen Magotan and looked at the extraordinarily brightred car with appreciation. Then she opened the door and got in.

"You will make sure no one ever finds out I bought this place," she ordered, looking straight at him. "If anyone finds out, then..."

She trailed off and smiled, but the coldness in her eyes made her threat pretty clear.

The general manager nodded several times in fear. He patted his chest proudly and promised, "Don't worry. I will make sure no one finds out."

"The overall marketing here will still be the same as before. You are still in charge, but I want a report every month. If it's not for the report, then don't bother me."

After saying that, she closed the door of the Magotan, stepped on the gas and left.

It was an ordinary car that was sold at a rather low price, but she drove it like it was a sports car.

The general manager looked at the car drifting away and sighed as if feeling all the stress leave his body.

"What a domineering woman! The new boss is not some ordinary person to be tempered with," he said to himself. After seeing how she dealt with Jax and his girlfriend, he was more determined to never step on her toes.

As Lucinda drove, she turned on the stereo and enjoyed her journey.

What just happened didn't deserve her attention. She hummed in a good mood along to the songs blasting on the stereo as she drove back to Angle Intl.

After a while, she got a call from Vivian. She hesitated for a moment but still answered.

"I'm on my way back to the company. Is there a problem?" Lucinda went straight to the point.

"Miss Ross, you are on the top search again!"

