

Chapter 81 Future Mrs. Hughes

Rosalynn indulged in a relaxing bath when her phone chimed with a new message.

It was Barlow's background.

It turned out that he was Brian's half-brother!

A trace of surprise flashed through Rosalynn's eyes.

Eagerly, she skimmed through the remaining information.

Barlow was three years younger than Brian, and he had a different name when he was a child.

Tucker was his mother's maiden name.

When Barlow was nine, his mother tried poisoning Brian but was exposed. Brian's mother presented the Hughes family with two options.

She could take Brian abroad and sever ties with the Hughes family.

Or the Hughes family would send Barlow away, forbidding him from participating in the family business.

Brian's maternal family held just as much influence as the Hughes family.

Thus, even after her divorce, Brian's mother could force the Hughes family to choose between the two options.

Upon the exposure of her actions, Barlow's mother chose suicide, and Barlow found himself in an awkward position.

Naturally, the Hughes family favored Brian and opted to send Barlow overseas.

It was only a matter of time before Barlow's mindset changed.

Abandoned by his family in a foreign land, he had only an elderly servant and his aunt for support.

He faced a sea of unfamiliar faces, teachers, and classmates with different skin colors.

In school, he endured frequent bullying.

Thus, he befriended some troublemakers.

During his junior year's summer break, he was detained for six months after seriously injuring someone.

Upon his release, the Hughes family leveraged their connections to enroll him in a prestigious institution.

Barlow seemed to change, dedicating himself to his studies and earning a master's degree in finance during his second year at his university.

Subsequently, he joined Sun Group, rising from a humble clerk to the present leader.

After carefully digesting the information, Rosalynn exhaled deeply.

No wonder Barlow seemed vaguely familiar.

His features bore a resemblance to Brian's.

Yet, Brian appeared more upright, while Barlow carried a hint of malice.

Barlow was a dangerous man.

And this dangerous man happened to be her ex-husband's half-brother.

What a cruel twist of fate!

She needed to maintain her distance from him.

Rosalynn erased the information and, without overthinking, went to bed for some sleep.

It was already evening when she woke up.

The shocking news on the phone was about Brian and Eleanor.

Both media and fans were eagerly fueling the fire.

Rumors circulated that Brian was genuinely committed to Eleanor this time. And the two were in love.

Rosalynn frowned. Her originally calm mood was stirred up by the news.

She composed herself, switched off the news, and noticed a missed call from Karina. She decided to call her back.

"Karina."

"Rosalynn, you're back, aren't you?"

"Yes. I just slept through the entire afternoon."

"Can you still manage to sleep? What's the meaning behind the news? Why did Eleanor go to Neham? Is Brian such a jerk that he wants to date two women at the same time?" Karina shouted angrily.

In contrast, Rosalynn remained composed.

"I don't care what his intentions are. In any case, I don't want to be involved with him."

"I used to hold Brian in high regard, but he's been such a disappointment! Rosalynn, I'll help you find a good man!" Karina declared.

Rosalynn chuckled and teased her, "No need. I've developed an immunity to men. How about we become a couple instead?"

"Wow, honey, that's an interesting idea, but I'm also a woman infatuated with handsome men."

"Oh, give it a rest. Let's go out for dinner and you can collect your gift while we're at it!"

"Okay!"

After ending the call, Rosalynn and Karina arranged to meet for dinner, and Rosalynn planned to give her a gift.

Karina continued to berate Brian, but she still couldn't help asking if there was truly nothing going on between Eleanor and Brian.

Images of Eleanor and Brian together flashed through Rosalynn's mind, as she pushed down her emotions.

She had almost been deceived by that playboy.

Thankfully, she had come to her senses in time.

The next day

"Rosalynn, thank you for your gift." Maggie expressed her gratitude. "By the way, did Eleanor go on the business trip with Mr. Hughes? It's been a while since he had any romantic involvement with celebrities. Rumor has it that Eleanor might become Mrs. Hughes one day!" 