

Chapter 83 Regretful

Rosalynn hesitated before asking, "Madam, what is your address?"

"No. 1220, West Ring Road, Naom Villa."

The middle-aged woman named Haleigh Tucker took a sip of water and shared her address with Rosalynn.

Hearing this, the designers who had just turned down the project glanced at Haleigh in disbelief.

They had all assumed that Haleigh resided in an older neighborhood on the outskirts of town.

To their surprise, she lived in an affluent villa district.

It was the great opportunity they had been anticipating every day.

They completely missed the chance.

Upon completing this project, the design fee alone would amount to hundreds of thousands of dollars, not to mention the commission after completion.

At this moment, the three designers were filled with regret.

Observing Haleigh's modest attire, they silently hoped she couldn't afford the hefty design fees.

After all, she had just mentioned that she couldn't bear excessive design costs.

Following a brief moment of astonishment, Rosalynn regained her composure.

She turned on the computer and displayed to Haleigh the design drafts she had created previously.

"Madam, do you like these styles? Of course, I will conduct a thorough analysis of the situation and develop the most suitable design after conducting an on-site inspection."

Haleigh leaned in to examine the designs, her eyes lighting up with amazement.

"Did you create all of these?"

"Yes."

"They are all absolutely stunning."

Haleigh perused several design drafts, offering her praise.

Rosalynn remained silent, simply offering a smile as she waited for Haleigh to finish her review.

"What about your design fee? How much would it cost to decorate the house?" Haleigh inquired.

Rosalynn took the calculator from Maggie and swiftly determined the cost.

"Madam, my design fee comes to around two hundred and fifty thousand. As for the decoration expenses, it depends on whether you select standard or high-end materials. The standard option would be approximately two to three million. The high-end choice would be upward of five million."

This pricing was consistent with market rates.

The three designers eagerly listened in, not taking their eyes off Rosalynn and Haleigh.

After a moment of contemplation, Haleigh replied, "Alright, I'll entrust you with the design of my house."

She agreed!

The three designers felt a pang of regret and loss.

Rosalynn smiled, "Thank you for your trust. If it's convenient, please make an initial deposit. I can accompany you to the house immediately for an on-site measurement."

"Okay."

Without any hesitation, Haleigh agreed, and the receptionist promptly guided her through the necessary procedures.

"Rosalynn, you're incredible. You just secured a major project." Maggie commended Rosalynn.

Rosalynn simply offered a smile and didn't say anything. She gathered her belongings, preparing to take measurements at the house.

"Rosalynn, don't you think this goes against the rules? This order should have been mine. How can you just snatch my client?" Asher complained, feeling wronged.

"Yeah, Rosalynn, it wasn't your turn to take the order."

"Exactly, it should be given back to us."

The other two designers who had refused the project earlier now attempted to steal it from Rosalynn.

"Did I really steal your client?" Rosalynn questioned softly, continuing to organize her things without looking up. "Didn't you all refuse it?"

The three of them exchanged glances, momentarily at a loss for words.

Asher suggested, "Rosalynn, you're an assistant designer. You're not qualified to design on your own. What if I take the lead as the primary designer and you assist me?"

"Yeah, Rosalynn, I have experience in villa design. You could be my assistant too."

"Rosalynn, if you give me this project, I'll mentor you from now on. What do you think?"

Hearing the audacious proposals of the three designers, Rosalynn finally lifted her gaze.
