

Chapter 422 Repentance Of Marriage

Meanwhile, in Mathias, the grand celebration of Sergio and Marnie's wedding was delayed due to unforeseen circumstances.

Tyrone's arrest and the resulting turmoil within the Blakely Group made it unfeasible for Sergio to proceed with the wedding at this time.

Additionally, Marnie was worried that Tyrone would implicate Sergio.

With the wedding date hanging in uncertainty, Marnie and Sergio retreated to Marnie's hometown. It was in the quaint Fifth Villiage of Yemond Town, nestled in the North District of Mathias.

The villagers there had long been privy to Marnie's romance with her affluent city beau.

Rumors of Sergio's generosity echoed through the town, as did the lavish purchases of household appliances and cars for Marnie and even the relocation of Marnie's siblings to a better school.

Whispers circulated that Jamal, Marnie's father, was considering buying a house once Marnie and Sergio got the marriage certificate.

Those villagers were envious, thinking Jamal was blessed with a daughter who had found herself a prosperous match.

However, others were skeptical of Marnie's relationship with her wealthy boyfriend. Some believed he was only interested in having a good time and would never tie the knot with Marnie who had not completed high school.

The cynics went on to assert that financial gains could be swift in the company of the affluent. They speculated that Marnie was willing to be a mistress in exchange for financial gains, and even if the relationship ended, she would not have suffered any losses.

Despite these doubts, Jamal surprised everyone by announcing that Marnie and Sergio had set a wedding date for July. He even invited his relatives and friends to a grand feast at a hotel.

This news confirmed the authenticity of Marnie's relationship with her boyfriend, which made them even more envious.

Jamal was treated well by the villagers now.

Previously, Jamal had a reputation for being stingy and taking advantage of others, which caused him to have a poor relationship with other villagers.

However, things changed when Marnie's boyfriend was a wealthy man. They began to view Jamal as someone who might be able to help them in the future, and their attitudes toward him shifted accordingly.

Those same people who had previously found Jamal insufferable were now coming out of the woodwork with newfound politeness, a shift that Jamal took great pride in and even gloated over.

Jamal's elder brother, Wendell, was known for being straightforward and honest, and he had a good relationship with the villagers due to his helpful nature.

When the townspeople compared Wendell and Jamal,

Wendell was always spoken of with high praise.

Much like Wendell and Jamal, Marnie and Shirley, who are close in age, were also compared.

Shirley was a college student considered beautiful, excellent, sensible, and obedient to her parents. Many parents hoped that their children could be as good as Shirley.

When discussing Marnie, people often remarked that she was not suitable for romance due to her stingy and temperamental nature. They thought she might not be fit for a marriage partner.

However, the situation had since changed.

Regrettably, Wendell was diagnosed with kidney failure, necessitating a substantial sum of money for his medical care. This situation led to Shirley discontinuing her academic endeavors and taking up employment.

Despite Marnie's early departure from school, she was fortunate to form a relationship with a wealthy boyfriend, resulting in a sudden improvement in her family's financial situation. This newfound prosperity seemed to extend to her relatives as well.

The narrative shifted, and Marnie became the symbol of good fortune.

The villagers marveled at the unpredictable nature of luck. An intangible force capable of altering destinies.

Certain events may prevent a highly skilled person from having the chance to demonstrate their skills. However, a regular person fortunate enough to have good fortune could surprisingly succeed and reap significant benefits.

Given the current circumstances, Jamal had the awkward task of informing his relatives and friends that Marnie's wedding had been postponed to a later date.

Those curious villagers started to imagine things. Was it because Marnie's boyfriend wanted to break up with Marnie?

The news spread quickly, like wildfire, throughout the village, leading to widespread gossip and speculation about the reason for the delay.

The villagers were oblivious to the Blakely Group or the economic crime. In their simplistic understanding, they only assumed that Marnie's boyfriend was on the brink of abandoning her.

To manage the escalating rumors, Jamal claimed the wedding got postponed solely due to Sergio's demanding schedule, and Sergio would pick a date to hold the wedding in the future.

As for the tumult within the Blakely family, Jamal guarded it like a closely held secret.

However, the villagers, skeptical by nature, found it hard to swallow Jamal's explanation.

Doubt lingered in the air, and the prevailing sentiment was that Sergio had called off the wedding.

Jamal's recent arrogance rubbed people up the wrong way, stoking the fires of jealousy among some villagers. When the opportune moment presented itself, they seized it to voice their opinions. "Why would a wealthy man marry an uneducated girl like Marnie? Even if he did want to marry someone, he would likely choose a nice and obedient girl like Shirley. I don't know why a rich man would want to marry Marnie."

Their disdain found a chorus of agreement among the

At that moment, Sergio and Marnie pulled into Fifth Village.

Eagerly awaiting them at home, Jamal immediately sent his children outside to see what was causing the commotion.

It was Marnie! Unable to contain their excitement, the family members rushed to greet Marnie.

They gazed in awe at the three luxurious vehicles parked outside. As the car doors swung open, Sergio, clad in an elegant suit, emerged and stood beside Marnie. The family, overcome with nervousness and the fear of potentially embarrassing Marnie, remained frozen, uttering a subdued "Marnie" to greet her appropriately.

Marnie smiled warmly and introduced Sergio to her siblings, encouraging them to greet their future brother-in-law. "This is your brother-in-law. You can say hello to him."

With shy exchanges, Marnie's siblings took turns shaking hands with Sergio and gesturing to welcome them into the house.

News of Sergio's presence quickly spread, drawing curious onlookers to Jamal's house to catch a glimpse.

Sergio, young and handsome with an air of elegance, left a lasting impression. His demeanor was captivating, and the villagers concluded that he must be a well-educated nobleman. It reinforced the belief that Marnie was incredibly fortunate to have him as her partner.

The village rumors that had once buzzed with skepticism and doubt dissipated into thin air.

Sergio's exceptional etiquette and graciousness were evident in every aspect.

There were thoughtful gifts for Marnie's family in each car, including wine, personalized gift boxes, and carefully selected items for Marnie's siblings.

The drivers scurried back and forth, shuttling the generous offerings into Jamal's house.

Observing this bustling activity, the villagers exchanged hushed sentiments and were awestruck.

Adding to the entourage, several remote relatives of the Blakely family accompanied Sergio. Though not as influential as the Blakely family itself, each member carried a weight of affluence that Jamal dared not underestimate.

Jamal, eager to showcase his newfound status as the future father-in-law of Sergio, purposefully lingered behind, seemingly unaffected by the commotion around him.

However, as he sat in the living room, he couldn't shake the anticipation that overwhelmed him. His knee shook nervously, and he gripped the armrest, attempting to compose himself.

When Sergio and his entourage entered, Jamal put on a flattering smile. He stood up and approached them. "Please, come in."

His arrogance around the villagers sharply contrasted with his humble demeanor in front of Sergio. Recalling his performance, Jamal harbored regret.

Jamal invited several of his close relatives to entertain Sergio and his relatives.

As introductions ensued and the gathering settled down, the conversation inevitably turned to Wendell. Relatives delicately shared that Wendell was battling kidney failure, recuperating, and unable to join the festivities.

Marnie chose not to inform Shirley and Wendell about their trip back. Otherwise, Wendell would have attended had he known.

Sergio, upon learning of Wendell's condition, expressed genuine concern, "Kidney failure is a significant health issue. Marnie, why didn't you tell me? I should have visited him earlier. Lynch from Healthwell Hospital is a friend of my grandfather. If one of your family members is in trouble, I can manage to lend a helping hand."

Sergio's compassionate words earned him unspoken praise from those present. Whether it was a genuine offer of help or a diplomatic gesture, he navigated the situation with grace, demonstrating respect for Marnie's family without a hint of condescension.

The attendees touched by Sergio's compassion found solace in the prospect of his willingness to lend a helping hand in times of need.

Marnie was in a difficult position, explaining, "Wendell has already undergone a kidney transplant operation, and he's currently recuperating. I just want to avoid disturbing him during his delicate phase."

A relative of Marnie spoke up. "A kidney transplant operation must be costly. Shirley is still in school. How did she manage to gather such a substantial sum of money?"

Marnie played innocent and shrugged her shoulders. "I'm not sure. Shirley handled it herself. I offered to contribute part of my salary, but she declined, insisting she had it covered. I noticed she has a designer bag, so I retracted my offer."

What could a college student do to get two hundred thousand in such a short time?
