

Chapter 14 The Product Launch

The next day, Debbie changed into the evening dress Kasie prepared for her. It was a wine red off-shoulder dress. Staring at herself in the mirror, Debbie thought she looked sexy yet elegant and almost a little distant. The dress accentuated her figure perfectly.

When Debbie emerged from the fitting room, Kasie's jaw dropped.

Every move Debbie made was highlighted by the fit of the dress. Her hair was coiled up in a bun, with two tendrils of hair framing her face, making her look somewhat laid-back. She looked so charming that Kasie couldn't tear her eyes off her.

Besides, Debbie was born with a cold temperament, which made people feel that she was unreachable.

"Oh, my God... Debbie, you look gorgeous in this dress!" Kasie was dumbfounded and nearly speechless.

If Debbie wore this dress to the party, all the men would definitely swoon over her and all the women would be green with jealousy!

The Hilton Group's product launch was held on a cruise ship named The Ocean. The giant cruise ship, which could carry thousands of people, was docked at the seaside in the east of Alorith.

This luxury cruise ship worth billions of dollars was the first choice for a venue for many big company parties.

As soon as Debbie stepped foot on that ship, the playboys couldn't keep their eyes off her.

But she was indifferent to their gazes. The wine red dress made her look aloof, noble, and ultimately unreachable.

Kasie, on the other hand, was eager to talk to some boys. She immediately left Debbie in the dust when they got on the ship.

Bored out of her mind, Debbie went to find a corner to retreat to.

However, just when she thought she could take a breather, somebody handed a glass of wine to her. "Care to have a drink with me, Miss?"

A man in a dark blue suit stood in front of Debbie, sizing her up with his roving eyes.

This man looked wealthy. Everything he was wearing was designer. His eyes, however, reeked of a sort of arrogance that came with money.

Other men visibly looked gloomy when they saw that that man had taken an interest in Debbie.

"Damn it! She has caught Louis's eyes. We don't stand a chance."

"True. Louis is a playboy, but his family is filthy rich. I doubt any woman can refuse him."

Debbie overheard this nearby discussion and raised her eyebrows indifferently. "Get lost."

Louis Kent nearly choked on his wine. He didn't expect that Debbie would refuse. The smile on his face turned into a scowl.

"What did you just say to me? Don't you know who I am?"

Debbie snorted. "I only know that great barkers are no biters."

Louis took a deep breath and quickly forced a smile. He thought that, as long as he showed off his wealth, he would definitely win this woman over. "Hold on. Don't say no to me just yet. I'm always generous to my women, if you know what I mean. Don't be ungrateful."

There was a slightly threatening tone in that last sentence. Then he held out the glass to Debbie again.

Smiling faintly, Debbie narrowed her eyes at him and took the glass.

Louis thought that Debbie had taken the bait. Just as his smile turned complacent, Debbie reached up and tipped the glass over his head, pouring the red wine all over his hair and clothes.

His carefully combed hair was instantly ruined and his expensive suit was stained red with wine. He looked a far cry from elegant.

Everyone gasped in shock.

The Kent Group was one of the top ten companies in Alorith. Both Louis's wealth and status were stunning. However, some unknown woman had refused his advances and even had the audacity to pour wine over his head.

"What the fuck! How dare you?!"

Louis was so angry that he raised his hand to slap Debbie. However, before he could take the swing his wrist was caught and gripped tightly.

Debbie's eyes widened slightly when she saw who it was that had helped her.

Louis turned around to curse whoever stopped him, but when he saw the man holding his wrist, all the color drained from his face.

"Mr... Mr. Hilton!"