She nodded, eyes glistening. "I have no reason to lie. Not now. It is what it is. It doesn't change the fact that I cheated on you. Deceived you. I was a terrible wife. But I'm begging you to believe me, I never enjoyed it."

"Why did you do it at all? Why anal, when you never would with me?"

"For the money. They paid extra. That was all. I was a wh

It wasn't something that we ever planned or even discussed, just sort of a habit that we fell into. As our night was coming to a close we would settle in for a drink or a late night snack and basically review the day.

"How was your day, Suze?"

"Everything was OK, honey."

That was the sum total of our most frequent end of evening discussion. Sometim

Margaret Peterson was my closest friend. Our families lived across the street from each other. From the 3rd grade on, when her family moved to our neighborhood, she was my study partner, my companion to nearly every school gathering and even my date for senior prom. She taught me the meaning of loyalty and friendship, and maybe unbeknownst to her

"I know what you mean. I have done a lot of thinking about what I want my life to be like. I look at you and mom as the gold standard. I want to be as successful and content with my life as you are with yours. I want to share my life with someone as beautiful, smart and strong as mom."

I honestly thought my dad was going to cry. Either that or he s

So after my four years at Harvard, I said goodbye to my dream of Yale Law and hello to MIT and an MBA. It was a bit unusual for someone to be admitted with such a limited amount of real world work experience. Giving up my summer vacations for internships certainly worked in my favor.

I would like to say that it was my academic reputation and interview

Shannon almost shot out of her chaise lounge. Her breasts bouncing back and forth as she whipped her head around to look first at me and then her sister. Her mouth was hanging open in shock. On any normal day, I would be hard pressed to not think about shoving my cock in there to fill the void. But not today. Hey, don't judge. I had been a faithful

I went straight to the office from the airport. My flight from New York put me back in Chicago just before noon.

I had spent the weekend with my favorite hobby: listening to the rock bands of Poughkeepsie at various venues. Miss Davis had me out of Chicago within the hour, after I left my wife and her sister on Friday night. It was a very nice turn

"I wanted a woman who would be my partner. Someone smart, and funny, and beautiful. I wanted a woman who would make me want to be a better person. And I stopped looking the day that I met you. I knew from the very first moment I saw you that you were the one. I had never felt that way about anyone before you, and certainly no one since I met you."

The house seemed cold. It was completely quiet again for perhaps only the third or fourth time since we had moved in. I loved this house. It was the only home I had ever really known. But it was almost eerie walking in the door. Almost the same as the day I knew my parents were dead, only worse.

The main floor looked like it hadn't been used in day

The restaurant was a pretty romantic setting. It was much quieter than it had been on our first date. But then again, there weren't 60 drunken wedding guests in the middle of a celebration. The DJ lights and sound system had been replaced with candles and a jazz pianist. Susan was the same though, radiating beauty and grace wherever she went.
