Chapter 1121 In Her Eyes:>20

"I hadn't so much as spoken to a boy or man, other than my father, in more than a year. Then I met you. Your family came to welcome us to the neighborhood. I watched from the stairs for a long time. Staring at you. You were different. I couldn't explain it. I still can't. But I knew you were different."

"I didn't know you had seen me until you slip

Kyle David Watson was 34 years old and a paradox. A college dropout shouldn't have had his business savvy. Someone of his intellect should never have had such trouble remaining focused in college. His calm, quiet demeanor didn't match his muscled, 6'2" frame. His nerd-like fascination with gadgets and technology didn't match his athletic ability. H

Miguel 'Manny' Martinez was a former gang member turned good guy. By day, he ran a community center for troubled youth. By night, he ran the area's only boxing and mixed martial arts training center. He was also a beast of a man. Six feet five inches, two-hundred thirty pounds of solid, chiseled muscle. He mostly hid the tattoos that told the story

He bought a house and a car and a dog and had money to spare. His friends were shocked with his success. His boss was stunned and still chuckling whenever he got to tell the story about how the kid, who was dropping off his mail, had saved his ass.

It had been two years, probably the best in his life, but Kyle felt a little empty until she was ther

"It's ten bucks each for the night to use the equipment and share a locker."

"Nah, man I wanna get in the ring."

Manny gave the big guy in front of the group the once over. He clearly had some training. Manny asked the standard questions and the young man had all the right answers, a wrestling background and was willing to sign the liability waiver

This is what Dana wanted. A man who didn't know her husband, who couldn't respect him, who would never fear him.

As her body was pushed against the door and his hands started tearing her clothes from her body, she struggled to find her key and place it in the lock. It wasn't as though she was being cautious, with her bra enclosed breasts visible to

Dana was in full panic mode. It was like someone had slapped her in the face and awoken her from a nightmare. She glanced at her watch again. She only had two hours left before Kyle was home. It was enough time. Barely, but enough. She squealed to a stop in the driveway, barely noticing that the garage door was now closed. Then she dropped her keys

"Yes. Yes, she is in heaven."

"My mommy talks to my daddy, too. But she cries a lot while they are talking so I decided to take a walk. Did you bring her those flowers?"

"Yes, I did. Emily loved flowers."

"I like flowers, too. I have some on my dress. See?"

Her pudgy little fingers pulled the hem of her dress out so she could show him.

"There's one

Julie turned to face me as she reached the door.

"Thanks, Brayden. Will I see you tomorrow?"

"You bet."

She stood on the tips of her toes and kissed me softly on the cheek. Her scent lingered for just a moment as she spun around and made her way into the

I watched her peruse my collection. Her eyes gave her away with double takes at the photographs of places we always said we would visit together, back when our dreams were impossible but shared. She was the epitome of walking sexuality. The glass dangled in her fingers, the wine swirling to match the sway in her hips. When she tipped her head, to I
