

118 Chapter 118

Henry frowned. Surely that was so stupid and illogical. Even a little kid wouldn't fall for it. 1

But Erin tried her best to show her doe eyes and her 'cute pitiful kitten' look, just so Henry and Michael would believe her. 1

Henry was about to call her out for being an idiot, but he saw Kate, who stood behind Erin and glared at him, warning him not to make a stupid move that would displease Erin.

Henry gulped. He really disliked this kind of play and couldn't wait to throw that evil bitch into her arctic coffin. But of course, he had to follow her instruction, or things wouldn't go as planned. 2

So Henry nodded, "I see. I believe you, Miss Ross."

"R—Really?" Erin couldn't believe that Henry had fallen for it. 'It must be because of my charm! Yes, he must be willing to do whatever I want because I'm so beautiful, sexy, and charming, that's why he can't resist me!' 6

"Mrs. Woods, please refrain from bullying Miss Ross in the office. She is our precious asset in the office."

Kate snorted and turned around to walk into her office, ignoring them completely.

"Mr. Grant, Mr. Eckermann, thank you so much for saving me from my evil sister!" Erin said as she threw herself into Henry's strong body. She hugged him tightly and added, "I don't know what I should do without you!"

"Y—You can release me now, Miss Ross," Henry said as he didn't know if he should push her away.

He looked at Michael, asking for help, and Michael sighed.

"Miss Ross, why don't we go to my office now? You don't need to work, but I'd love to have your company in my office," Michael said.

"Oh, okay!" Erin quickly released Henry and hugged Michael instead, much to the latter's disgust. 2

"Wow, it's quite early in the morning, and my eyes are already tainted," Mai came out of nowhere, bringing a tray of coffee and tea cups for her bosses, as it was part of her job. She looked at Henry, Michael, and then Erin, still hugging Michael, and commented, "Maybe you should get her to do something other than spreading her legs." 9

Erin turned around and glared at Mai.

Again, that bitch mocked Erin boldly. She dared to do it even in front of Henry and Michael! 2

"Mr. Grant, Mr. Eckermann, don't you hear that? That woman is mocking me! Go do something for her! Punish her again!" Erin yelled. 1

Michael was too stunned to speak. He got nervous when Mai stared at him with her eyes full of disgust. He wanted to change her view, though he knew only Kate could do that. 2

Henry was also about to scold Mai to make it believable, but Mai quickly stopped him, "Before you say something to me, Mr. Grant. I want you to know that I only recognize Mrs. Woods as my boss, and I become your secretary because she told me to do it. I do not care if you fire me, by the way, I'm staying because I want to help Mrs. Woods, not you." 3

With that, Mai walked into Kate's office to help her as always, leaving Henry helpless against that feisty, petite woman.

"See? She has no manners!" Erin yelled. "She needs to get fired too!" 2

"I can't do that," Henry said. "As she said, she works with Mrs. Woods, and Mai is a very competent secretary. I can't fire her unless you want to take all of her jobs, because you're technically a second secretary here." 1

Erin paled when Henry said that she'd have to do all the things Mai did if Mai got fired.

She wasn't good at managing. Nor was she good at assisting.

In fact, she wasn't good at anything other than spreading her legs open, 'But that's all you need as a woman! Let the men do the job, while I just rest and get pampered!' 5

"W—Well, I guess we can keep her here for a while," Erin murmured. She looked at Michael again and smiled at him, "Mr. Eckermann, can you do something to punish her later?"

Michael sighed again, "Yes, I will. Now let's go to our office, Miss Ross."

"Yes, Sir!"

Henry looked at Michael and Erin, who went into their office, and he could only shake his head in disbelief, 'I have to quickly prepare the ice coffin for that bitch, so she wouldn't be able to do anything stupid. I think I can finish it in two months.' 6

Henry wanted to come into Kate's office, but he was probably unwanted there, especially with Mai inside.

So he entered the CEO's office and began to put Erin's first 'international business trip' in motion. 1

Kate put the teacup on the coffee table and commented, "I can't believe that you can survive with that kind of sister, Ma'am. She is crazy." 1

Kate chuckled. She sipped tea and carefully put it on the table, "I tend to overcompensate, Mai. I feel indebted with something that I did when I was young, so I spoiled her rotten until she became like that."

"That still doesn't excuse her shitty behavior!" Mai insisted. "Ma'am, anyone might have had a terrible childhood, or even resentment towards someone, but you've been nothing but good to her. If she is still a human, then she would at least try to forget about it, or even better, forgive you completely."

"Clearly, she just wants to torment you for fun!" Mai accused. "So, Mrs. Woods, if you don't want to do anything against her because you're her sister, then let me do it. Let me find a way to kick help you!"

"Ah, about that, I already have a plan in motion, Mai," Kate said. "And you happen to be the only one who doesn't know about it."

Mai frowned, "Wait, you already did something? But why can't I see the difference in her, Ma'am?"

Mai smiled and sipped her tea again, "Before I tell you, promise me two things, Mai." 4
