

132 Chapter 132

"Go on," Kate said without fear in her eyes. "I will just tell them that you're trespassing. This is my apartment, understand?" 1

"B—But you said I can stay here too!" 2

"Not anymore," Kate grinned. "At best, I will just tell them that you are the one who attacked me first, that's why I'm defending myself."

"What in the—You're lying! You have no proof of that!" Erin yelled back, thinking that the cops would believe her because she had bruises on her cheeks. 2

"Just like you, do you have proof that I am the one who did that to you?" Kate said, and Erin was stunned after realizing Kate was right. She also had no proof of what happened right now. "In fact, you'll always be the wrong one if we take this to the police. Because you're the one who trespassed into a private property."

Erin gritted her teeth. She was angry with the fact that she couldn't do anything against her sister. She wasn't used to this feeling of defeat and wanted to get revenge on her sister.

"Anyway, I'm done with you. I will give you a minute to get up and leave," Kate said before she turned around. She ignored Erin completely and went to her bedroom to rest. Kate was certain that Erin wouldn't dare to do anything, at least for a good while until they could go with the plan to throw her into the frozen tundra.

Erin could only admit defeat at this point. She got up and then walked out of the apartment with a stinging pain on her cheeks and also an awful headache due to a concussion after getting hit twice.

She slammed the door shut as a sign that she was leaving.

Erin was really upset with the idea that she had lost against her sister, 'She's supposed to listen to everything I said! What makes her so brave now? Is it a man? Does she have a powerful man that will support her? That's impossible, she's so fucking ugly!' Erin cursed in her heart.

Erin entered the elevator and went down. She stood in silence, thinking of a way to get her revenge on her sister, who dared to humiliate her like this.

Erin's eyes were filled with fury whenever she remembered Kate, who slapped and kicked her ruthlessly.

She was never humiliated in her life. She was always worshiped, adored, admired, and loved by everyone around her, and to think that her ugly sister was the first one to hurt her, Erin realized that she had to reclaim her throne as the queen!

Erin scoffed while rubbing her cheeks, "It's fine, I still have my biggest weapon. I will tell Henry and Michael about this, I will make sure that they will pity me." 3

"Just wait and see, sis. I've turned those men into my slave, I can always tell them to do whatever I want," Erin said. "Including beating up an ugly bitch like you."

**

Kate sighed as she finished cooking her quick dinner and washed her hand before eating in front of the TV. She was still acting cool, but her body trembled as she tried to hold the excitement.

"It's scary, but at the same time, it also feels good," Kate murmured. "For the first time in my life, I stood up on my own against Erin."

Honestly, Kate regretted that she hadn't done this way earlier, probably when Erin was still a teenager and showed a sign of being a massive skank.

She never got the idea of fighting back before.

She thought it was her responsibility as the older one to support Erin no matter what because she was her only sister. 2

In fact, if it weren't because of the baby in her belly, she would still do whatever Erin told her to do, simply because she had no reason to object.

Kate looked down at her belly and patted it gently.

Of course, she still couldn't feel a thing since she was probably only a few weeks old. 1

But she could feel the emotional connection between her and her child, "My baby, I'm doing all this so you will be safe from the evils that surround us. I will protect you no matter what," Kate felt sentimental when she remembered how fragile a baby was. She didn't want to lose her baby due to a miscarriage because this baby was her treasure. Thus, she added, "So please, stay safe inside Mommy until the day you're born into this world. I will finally be a complete woman by then...." 2

Kate remembered all the harsh words she got from everyone around her because she couldn't get pregnant.

She was raised in a very conservative environment, where the women married very young, usually in their late teens to early twenties.

Meanwhile, she got married at twenty-seven and couldn't get pregnant after a while.

Everyone—even her mother—always talked about her in her hometown. They would usually accuse her of marrying too late. That's why she lost her fertility.

Some said that Kate was unlucky, and others said that God did not bless her because of what her father did to the community.

But in the end, they always agreed on one thing.

-

'She is not a complete woman. You can't be a true woman before you get pregnant and give birth to a healthy child.'

-

It also didn't help that her husband didn't try to defend her.

He'd always silently agree with everything that his mother said, and Kate had to endure what Mary—her mother-in-law said about her, from 'stealing her son' to 'manipulating him into marrying a woman with no use.' ³

Kate continued to rub her stomach. Her tears began falling as she knew she had become a completely different person after getting pregnant.

She was far more ruthless and would do anything to protect her baby. It made her unsure if it was good or bad for her and the baby. 1

"My baby, I truly have nothing but you in this world. I will never let anything or anyone harm you."

“

:(

Kate becomes overly protective of her baby because it's her first pregnancy.

—

ForeverPupa

Creator's Thoughts

