574 The missing memory (6)

The shopping cart quickly crashed into her from the side. She could not Dodge in time and was hit on the side of her waist.

This scene repeated in her mind a few times. The shopping cart had somehow become the medical cart in the hospital, and it was also charging straight at her at a fast and fierce speed. It also hit the side of her waist, and then she fell to the ground. In the next second, bright red blood covered her entire body.

Su Wanwan frowned uneasily in her sleep. Her cheeks swayed left and right, and cold sweat kept pouring out of her forehead.

She didn't know why the scene in the underground parking lot had turned into such a terrible scene, but she clearly didn't have that memory. Why did she feel like her heart was being tightly clenched by a big hand when she dreamed of that scene, making it almost impossible for her to breathe? it was extremely uncomfortable, as if she had experienced it herself.

The scene was still repeating itself. Su Wan was deeply immersed in it, her whole person crying abnormally, as if she had returned to that moment. At the last second when she was about to suffocate, she finally struggled out of the nightmare.

Su Wanwan suddenly opened her eyes, looked at the dark and misty area in front of her, and gasped for air.

Su Wanwan sat up from the bed, her hands trembled and she turned on the light at the bedside table. The sudden light made her eyes squint. Looking at the familiar bedroom, her wildly beating heart slowly calmed down.

Su Wanwan lifted the quilt and got up. She went downstairs, walked into the kitchen, poured a cup of water, and drank it in one gulp. The coolness slid down her throat and into her body. Su Wanwan was completely awake.

The dream just now was too real, so real that it didn't feel like a dream. However, she didn't have this scene in her memory. So, did that incident only occur to her because of what happened today, or did it really happen to Wanwan but she didn't remember it?

After all, she had once forgotten everything. Although she remembered it later on, it was hard to guarantee that she had not missed out on some memories.

And for some reason, she felt that this was not a dream, but a fact, a fact that was very important to her.

Because even now, whenever she thought of herself lying in a pool of blood, her heart would ache.

Su Wanwan's hand unconsciously clenched the glass. She bit her lower lip and tried hard to recall the scene in the dream. There seemed to be a door in that place, like a Xuxu like a hospital door. Then, the cart that hit her seemed to be the kind of cart in the hospital. So, the place where she was hit and fell was in the hospital?

In her dream, her stomach was still protruding, which meant that she was pregnant at that time. When she was pregnant, the hospital she often went to was the central Hospital.

So she fell at the entrance of the central Hospital?

Could this be a memory that she had missed out?

Su Wanwan's head ached from thinking, but she couldn't think of anything. She could only give up for the time being and planned to wait until tomorrow morning to go to the hospital to have a look.

If she could find this place in her dream, she might be able to remember something.

The next day, su Wanwan waited for nanny li to come back and told her to take care of the child. She then drove to the central Hospital.

When the car arrived at the entrance of the hospital, she found a parking space and parked the car. After parking the car, she pushed the door open and got out.

Unexpectedly, as soon as she entered the hospital, she ran into a familiar face.
