

Enchanted 218

When she was about to turn around, she saw a passionate girl step up to him and get very close to him to pour his beer. Her plump breasts were almost falling into his arms, which annoyed Irish.

With the shot of the gun, the ostriches began to rush forward, including Irish's. It ran so quickly that she had to grab its wings tightly to avoid falling off.

The ostrich's wings were like the reins of a horse, and she could control its speed as well as the direction through its wings. Though it couldn't fly because of its heavy body, its wings still played an important role in them. When they run in the wild, their open wings can be used as a sail to speed them up, and when they fight, their wings can deter enemies. They could even be used as an umbrella under the sun as a shelter for their chicks, and when they were courting, they used their wings to attract attention.

Riding ostriches here was a special activity because the ostrich has evolved to have amazing strength in its legs and feet. They could kick a dog to death with their strong legs, and many animals could not compete with their running speed of 60 kilometers per hour.

Therefore, when Irish was riding on the ostrich, she felt very excited, as if she was driving a fast car, and her hat almost flew away.

Gradually she mastered the riding skill and began to speed up, overtaking the people ahead. When she went head to head with another racer, the man couldn't help jeering. "Hey girl, you won't win this race."

Irish patted the ostrich, and it suddenly sped up, but at the same time, the other racer also sped up. She took a glimpse of the man who was laughing at her, which made her feel uncomfortable. Suddenly she squinted and pulled off the colored silk scarf around her neck and waved it at the other ostrich. The man's ostrich became excited, and she loosened her hands, letting it float away, and the ostrich carrying the white man squawked and chased the silk scarf.

The man screamed angrily, whose cry was mixed with his ostrich's.

No one said it was a fair competition, so Irish felt very proud of her trick.

When the man's ostrich left the track, Irish knew she had eliminated a competitor. However, she was not afraid that he would catch up with her again because, obviously, the ostrich was more interested in her silk scarf. Moreover, the ostrich was more than three meters, and she bet he would not jump down from it.

Suddenly another man ahead frivolously whistled at her, and when she caught up with him, he began constantly chattering with her, which annoyed her. Irish couldn't leave him behind in a short time, but the man was so nosy that he even asked if she had a boyfriend, but she did not reply.

Irish finally took a glimpse at him, and he took the chance to ride his ostrich up by her, side by side.

She took out a whistle from her pocket and suddenly blew it, immediately producing a sharp noise. The man was shocked, and before he could respond to it, his ostrich chirped and then rushed into a haystack, and the man fell down.

Irish raised the whistle in her hands and said cheerfully, "I'm really sorry!"

It was the so-called "ostrich spirit." When they encountered any danger, they would bury their heads and turn a blind eye to it.

She eliminated many opponents with her tricks, and she was getting closer to victory. Many of her opponents were left behind by her, but there was still one man in front of her. As long as she could surpass him, she could be the winner of the race. It was not difficult for her to eliminate him.

When Irish was riding on the ostrich and chasing him from behind, she suddenly shouted at his back. The man turned back to take a look at her, and Irish smiled and waved to him. However, the man was confused, and she suddenly took out an ostrich egg from her pocket.

Irish waved the ostrich egg and pretended to throw it at him. The man hastily sped up while Irish also rushed to chase him. When she was just three or four meters away from him, she shouted at him again, and the man turned back at her once more.

At the moment he turned back, she threw the ostrich egg to him, which frightened him as well as his ostrich. The ostrich fluttered its wings, and the man couldn't grab it and fell off his ostrich as well.

Irish giggled, and when she passed by him, the man shouted at her in anger.

Finally, Irish won the game with her variety of dirty tricks. Of course, she also encountered a small incident. As she rushed to the finish line, thunderous applause erupted from the crowd. Irish arrogantly raised her hands to cheer for herself and forgot to hold onto the ostrich's wings. In two seconds, she was thrown from the ostrich's back and fell onto the ground as well.

The world began to slow down from the moment Irish flew off the ostrich's back. Her body first bounced off while her hands spread out in the air, and her cowboy hat flew away in the wind. Her expression was shocked and scared.

The audience was amused by her, covering their mouths to stop themselves from laughing.

When the world returned to its normal speed, they could see that Irish had slammed to the ground, and she cried out.

She won the race but almost broke her ribs.

After limping from the ground, the first thing she did was find Joseph, but she saw that he was surrounded by several competitors who were all filled with indignation.

Irish hastily slipped away since they were all her opponents who were foiled by her tricks.

When Irish won the race in a despicable way, Lilith was not in a good situation in New York. Though Irish fell down and was hated by her opponents, she won the game and got the prize.

However, at the same time, Lilith was being taken back to the police station.

She squatted in the corner of the police station with several wine sellers without ID cards, and she felt depressed because it was Jay who interrogated them.
