Emery was astonished while Joseph added, "Therefore, I hope there is a man to love her, no matter what kind of man he is and if he cares about her or not. She won't care about that."

After hearing this, her breathing became more rapid.

After explaining to her, Joseph took out a business card and handed it to her, saying, "You can tell me your decision at any time." Then he stood up and left.

Emery stood silently under the sunlight, and she felt the business card on the table was so dazzling.

After she was done teaching the college students, Irish had a quick meal and then hurried to the hospital. Cassie had been in a good state these days, but she always kept silent when Fredrick was there. And Irish also asked for her opinion several times and asked if she wanted to see him, while she admitted that she missed him but just didn't know what to say.

Irish knew clearly that she couldn't forget him and couldn't accept that their love died down in such a short time since she could even sacrifice her life for it. Fredrick was not a heartless man, and he would come to take care of her every day, and Cassie couldn't bear to refuse him.

But Irish didn't tell her that Roy was also there, just staring at her secretly. However, in fact, Irish was worried on the way to the hospital because she was afraid that she would argue with Fredrick again, and she also felt embarrassed to meet Roy, who often wore a grave face and looked different than ever. He didn't behave as noisy as before. But when she opened the door of the ward, she heard Cassie's laughter. And when she got in, she was surprised since she had never expected Daisy would come to visit her best friend.

Fresh fruits and flowers were put on the table, and Irish knew that it must be Daisy who brought that for Cassie. Fredrick was not in the room while Cassie's mother was there. She hastily greeted Irish when she saw her, while Irish felt weird, and at the same time, she was worried since she was afraid that Daisy would bring her the bad news. But Cassie was smiling there, so she was confused.

Daisy turned to her and explained, "I am here to bring some documents. Some identification materials for the upcoming jewelry of the Runestone Group."

Irish was still confused and frowned at her.

Seeing this, Cassie hastily explained to her, "I have passed through the qualifying period, and I still have to pass the examination to become a full member of the company. Daisy deliberately brings the latest material for me so that I could pass the examination easier."

Irish was totally shocked.

"Daisy, if I pass the exam, can I become a formal appraiser?" She held Daisy's hands and asked.

"There is one more step before becoming a formal appraiser. You have to study with a professional appraiser for half a year and then pass the assessment. After that, you can be a formal appraiser and could get the opportunity to study abroad." Speaking of this, Daisy looked at Irish and then said, "I hope these materials will help you to become a full member of Runestone Group, and that is what Mr. Dover wants you to achieve."

It was a sunny day, and the osmanthus fragrance was suffused in the air. Several patients were taking a walk in the small garden in the hospital while there was also a worker in the distance mowing the lawn. The golden leaves were flying in the breeze and finally fell down on the ground, which formed a sharp contrast.

Irish was walking with Daisy on the lawn and finally sat on the bench beside which the osmanthus was planted there so that they could feel the sweet scent in the air. It was her second "close contact" with Daisy. The first time was when she resigned from Runestone Group, Daisy helped her to pack things together, and now it was the second time for her to walk so close to her since she did not expect that she would come here, and she even didn't expect that Joseph would give a way out for Cassie.

Her quarrel with Joseph that night allowed her to see his inhumanity, and she misunderstood that Cassie would lose her job. Irish, even though he was annoyed by her and had been figuring out a solution that wouldn't stimulate Cassie and told her the truth that she may be dismissed. It was hard for her to imagine how disappointed Cassie would be if she knew she had lost her favorite work, and she also couldn't foresee the future, and that was why she wanted to have a conversation with Fredrick today.

However, things changed today when Daisy brought the news to her.

A slight breeze rose, stirring her long hair. She reached out and pinned her hair behind her ears, revealing her earlobes which looked like two pears under the sunlight. Daisy stared at her and sighed with huge admiration in her heart. Perhaps she would also fall in love with her if she was a man.

Irish had a pale oval face, and she looked even more beautiful under the sunlight, and no matter what kind of hairstyle she had, she looked so fair and comely.

She just draped her hair thick, glossy, and in tip-top condition like the thick seaweed. She had a full and smooth forehead, her eyebrows were lightly dyed, her skin was white while her eyes were deep and profound as the dark night and the light flowing deep in the bottom of her eyes was just like the fireworks in the night sky.

Her eyelashes were long and thick. Daisy was sure that she didn't apply any mascara. She was facing the light so Daisy could see clearly her sharp nose, which highlighted the three-dimensional outline of her cheek.

Her lips were the color of the cherry blossoms while she was biting them lightly.

Staring at her, Daisy couldn't help thinking what a beautiful woman her mother was. It was no wonder that Joseph, who did not pay much attention to women, would also fall in love with her. It turned out that people in love always cared about each other's appearance.
