

Enchanted 79

Irish couldn't help laughing and thought they regarded her as a peacemaker.

Ruby also said, "Yes, I know him. He is really a handsome man, and if they love each other, I think that's good for Isabel. I totally agree with Uncle William, and perhaps we could become business partners with the Key Group. What do you think, Joseph?"

As Joseph finished his dinner, he put down the tableware and scrubbed his mouth elegantly. Then he raised his head and looked serious, expressing his opinion in a slight but strong way, "You should take her words as a joke since she has just come to the company and it is unsuitable for her to go find someone and get married."

Ruby looked at Joseph with great astonishment and looked at Irish again. She only winked and didn't say any words. However, Roy asked, "Isabel, were you joking just now?"

Henry also looked at her confusedly.

Irish bit the cup. She had intended to deny it but changed her mind after recognizing Joseph's warning expressions. She looked at him with a closed mouth just like a pear flower in March, "You know me best."

Upon hearing these words, Henry felt a little regretful. Although he was not satisfied with Leo, it was reasonable to have such a son-in-law such as him. He sighed lightly and became serious, "One can never finish all of his work. Joseph, if you have any good suggestions, please introduce them to Isabel."

Joseph neither nodded nor shook his head. He didn't answer the question directly but said, "It can be discussed later after I return from Pennsylvania."

The autumn-winter jewelry show of the Runestone Group was a large exhibition that included the participation of the Vera Club and hundreds of media companies. It would show the rare jewelry in the Vera Club to the public for the first time. In addition to Washington and Los Angeles, the jewelry could also be shown in Pittsburgh, which was the first choice of these two cities.

If one was asked about what was the richest city, and he answered New York, Washington, or Chicago, he would be ignorant. As a matter of fact, Pittsburgh was surrounded by coal, and its rich resources made it more and more famous. There was one multimillionaire among 15 people. Even one with assets worth one million would be regarded as poor. Its GDP had already surpassed Los Angeles and ranked No.1 nationally. As a result, it became Joseph's key focus.

Irish had known it already, so she became excited as she heard it. She couldn't wait to say, "I want to go with you."

"You want to go there?" Lilith said with surprise before Joseph made any reaction, "It's said that the weather there is bad. You may suffer for it."

"Have you been there?" Irish glared at her.

Lilith stuck her tongue out and shook her head. "So you are not entitled to say that," Irish snorted.

Joseph added, "Her words make sense. It will be very tough during the expo, so you'd better stay at the company."

"But you also want me to accumulate more practical experience, don't you? Only field investigation can lead to practical experience," Irish was always good at debate, and she certainly could make it as she desired.

At last, Henry helped Irish and said, "Joseph, Isabel is right. It will be good for her to learn more about exhibitions."

Joseph took a glance at Irish and agreed after a while.

Irish smiled and felt very happy in her inner heart. She didn't want to go to Pennsylvania for the purpose of being excellent in the businesses. She made this decision for two reasons. Joseph required her to take a test which was very difficult for her since there were only two weeks, though there was a bountiful bonus. And this was the only choice for her to delay the deadline. So going to Pennsylvania became the top choice. She was to work, though it was superficial. Cunning as Joseph was, he needed to consider the reality. Besides that, she had never been to Pennsylvania, and she longed to experience a different lifestyle.

It could be considered traveling. More importantly, she didn't need to spend any money since Joseph would be responsible for all her expenses.

Everyone was tired of this family feast.

Maybe it was not usually the case, except for the fact that Irish was the stranger.

The housekeeper followed her words and arranged her room across from Ruby's. The room had a large area with delicate decorations. The wall was filled with oil paintings, and they must have been very expensive. However, Irish had no envious feelings about the luxurious life and only wondered how Joseph communicated with Ruby.

However, there were still visitors all the time. Roy came to ask her whether she was satisfied with the room, and then William and Kelly presented some dessert to her. Henry came there at last. Irish found that he wanted to talk about the past to her, so she excused herself, pretending to be sleepy. Henry observed her lack of interest, and he knew that she still hated him. However, he could not do anything, so he just gave her some notes and left.

Only when Irish was the only one in the room did she find that the room was really large. She was just like the floating dusk in the universe and became so small. She thought Joseph's room must be as large as this.

The scene that happened in Joseph's room was quite different.

Although he hardly lived in Henry's home, he was never disrupted by others chatting with him since they knew that he didn't want to be interrupted unless he spontaneously talked with someone. But this probability was too small.

As a result, nobody was clear about how they spent tonight.

After taking a shower, Ruby was draped in a real-silk night skirt, which certainly made her exquisite and enchanting. Her beauty was quite different from Irish's. Irish was like a red rose with thorns, while Ruby was more like a white lotus. The former was enthusiastic and charming, and the latter was natural. Just as Joseph described, they two have their own beauties.