

Under the Heiress' Facade #Chapter 471 - Read Under the Heiress' Facade Chapter 471

Chapter 471

Wayne was helping out in the northern wing of Youngworth Miracle when he saw Everly returning with puffy eyes, an obvious sign that she had cried.

Worried, he asked, 'Everly, what happened?'

Her lips pouted as soon as she met her brother. The tears she barely fought back began trickling down her cheeks again. "Wayne..."

The moment his dear sister cried, he panicked. 'What happened? Tell me.'

Everly had gone to look for Hera at the western wing of the clinic, but why did Everly return crying?

"Nothing. Hera didn't bully me." She quickly wiped her tears away before explaining, "She said something to me, and I believe she said it out of goodwill and nothing else."

Wayne instantly wore a solemn expression. "Of course, she said it out of goodwill. Even if she tells you off, you should repent and think if you've done anything wrong. Dr. Youngworth and Hera treat us so well. We must be grateful. Do you hear me?"

She bit her lip, wondering who was his sister. Hera or her?

Rhett returned to the Killian residence after work. In the living room, he asked Frederick, "Have you contacted Raven?"

"Nope, but we've found out a way to contact his assistant, Piglet. We're asking him to connect us to Raven," answered Frederick. Exclusive content

Rhett's brows furrowed, showing disapproval. 'How inefficient.'

"We need time. It's difficult to reach Raven,' Frederick explained.

"Don't give me excuses!" Rhett chided.

Linda raised her voice. "Why are you lashing it out at your son? Freddy is doing his best. He wasted one day for punishment, remember?"

The sheer mention of the punishment triggered Rhett. Anger and jealousy churned in him.

That day, all Frederick did was tease Hera, and that was all it took for him to be punished! What about Bernard, who didn't show respect to his elders and said vulgar words?

Chad turned a blind eye to Bernard's rudeness and let him go instead of holding him responsible! He was playing too much favoritism!

Rhett saw through everything. Chad might be strict on Bernard, but that was simply an act to cover up the favoritism behind it

Chad and Albert were the same; they favored Bernard more. If it were another member who had done those evil deeds Bernard did, they would've been exiled from the family a long time ago.

Bernard, the illegitimate child, didn't only remain in the family, but Albert even gave all of his shares to him! If this continued, Bernard would ultimately be the next head of the family. Rhett's family wouldn't gain anything good from this!

"Be quick! Before Bernard gets married, you have to perform better and earn your great-grandfather's recognition!" Rhett reminded Frederick.

"Got it." He got up and left the house.

"Alright, alright. What's the use of getting angry? We'll be the next head of the family for sure," Linda cooed.

Rhett took a sip of tea in an attempt to calm himself down. "Any updates from Aury's case?"

"Don't worry. They won't find out about me," she assured.

Chad and Karen would always put a lip over this kind of family conflict to protect the family's name. Therefore, Aurora's case was investigated discreetly, hence the inefficiency

Rhett nodded. 'Im glad.'

At that moment, Giselle knocked on the door and entered the house 'Uncle Rhett, Ms. Linda'

As soon as she came, she began whining, "Uncle Rhett, Aunt Linda, you have to help me out. Uncle Chad won't help me, and he's going to restore Ms. Hera's status. My parents are gone. I don't have anyone else to rely on. You guys are the only ones I can count on...."

The calculating couple exchanged looks. How would they not know the purpose behind Giselle's visit?

Giselle wanted to secure her position in the Killian family.

They wouldn't miss such a chance when a chess piece offered itself to them.

Chapter 472

Aurora felt better after taking the medicine from Youngworth Miracle Clinic for three days. She reached three months of pregnancy, and her baby was healthy.

After taking her medicine, Aurora went to the western wing of the clinic to look for Hera. Aurora asked, "What video did you watch that day?"

Hera was still connecting the clues based on what Aurora told her. Noticing Aurora's arrival, she closed her notebook.

"Have they found the culprit who switched your medicine?" Hera questioned back instead of answering Aurora's question.

"Not yet. The investigation is still ongoing," informed Aurora.

She wanted to know the culprit as soon as possible, but Karen wouldn't allow a high-profile investigation. All they could do was to look into it secretly.

"You can ask me about the video after finding out who the culprit is." Hera was driving Aurora out.

Despite her displeasure, there was nothing that Aurora could do and so she left.

As soon as Aurora left, Hera quickly synced her findings with Leon over the phone. In conclusion, she couldn't afford to just wait for the Killians' investigation. She had to start looking into the case starting from the voice recording.

However, even after her numerous attempts, she couldn't restore the voice recording. She couldn't help but think of S. If he were her, would he have been able to restore it?

She shrugged off the question within seconds when she recalled that he prohibited her from investigating the Killians. He even banned her account for six months! She should be able to use it in the middle of the next month.

As an afterthought, she shifted her attention to Vulcan.

Hera had confronted him a few times before. Considering that he was Grandmaster of Astral Nova, he might be able to do it. There was only one question holding her back—was he a foe or a comrade?

At that moment, her phone rang, interrupting her train of thought.

It was Leon.

"Boss, Frederick contacted me not long ago. He said that Killian Corporation has plans to develop a chip and would like you to join them. He even requested a face-to-face appointment for discussion at 3:30 pm. Do you want to accept it?"

"What if it's a trap?" she asked.

Her wanted warrant was still all over the Cyber Web. To think that Frederick wished to meet her now, she couldn't help the suspicions.

"I don't think so. He contacted me through Damian's acquaintance. Damian told me that Shirka OS developed by XS Corporation has affected Killian Corporation's sales.

"Plus, XS Corporation are developing their own chip. They're planning to invite the top 100 hackers on the Global Hacker List as guests to their third-year anniversary party. This is a never-before-seen event.

"With a few top hackers joining them, they would be able to develop a chip smoothly. That's why Killian Corporation is getting anxious. They're trying to recruit as many as they can.

"Oh right, you're one of the guests on their invitation list. I was going to ask if you're going or not. I've just received the invitation letter. Everyone in the group is saying that Mr. S and Vulcan will be going. But you're in a complicated situation right now—"

"I'll go!" Her eyes brightened at the news.

Hera understood where Leon was coming from. She was still on the wanted list.

However, she could make further decisions after attending the anniversary party. She didn't have to reveal her identity to be there.

"What about Frederick Killian? He wants to meet me at 3:30 pm. I haven't replied to him," asked Leon.

Recalling that repulsive face, she had an idea. "Tell him that you're up for it. Share the location. I want to enjoy the show."

Leon's radar caught on something when he heard that. It was the same old feeling he felt when Queenie met her consequences back then.

After receiving the address, Hera dressed up and told Catherine that she would be heading out.

Not long after she left the place, a car from the Killian family showed up at the clinic.

Giselle got out of the car in branded clothes. There were two maids in the Killian family's designated uniform behind her. One was holding her bag while the other was holding an umbrella over her.

What a grand arrival.

"Giselle Everett, how dare you show up here! What brings you here? If I remember correctly, you're not on the appointment list." Wayne, who was guarding the entrance, stopped Giselle.

"Move! I'm here to see that old bat!" She knocked him out of her way without a second thought and barged into the clinic.

He was going to stop her, but the maids blocked his way.

Chapter 473

When Giselle found the consulting room, something occurred to her. Holding her chin high, she turned around and warned, "And I'm Gianna Killian, not Giselle Everett. Get my name right or I'll tear your mouth off!"

"I don't care what G you are, but you'd better scram! You didn't make an appointment!" Wayne pushed the maids away and grabbed Giselle.

Right when he was going to drag her out of the clinic, the door to the consulting room opened. Catherine came out of the room, and her expression turned grim the moment she saw Giselle.

"Let her in," Catherine instructed.

She had always wanted to talk to Giselle after meeting her in the Killian residence. Unfortunately, Giselle had blocked Catherine's contact number.

Obediently, Wayne let go of Giselle.

Catherine sent the patient away and told the nurse to ask the next patient to wait for a moment. Then, she returned to the consulting room.

Giselle studied the room, and jealousy bubbled in her. All of the furniture was made of expensive red sandalwood, especially the bed for acupuncture. She deemed it a waste of such valuable resources. Catherine closed the door. "You took the things in the hidden compartment under my bed, didn't you?" "Yup.' Giselle didn't hide the truth.

The picture in it led her to Rhett. She was able to return to the Killian family after a DNA test.

Catherine's eyes reddened. "Where is it? Return me the documents and photos."

She didn't demand the valuable accessories because she could guess that Giselle had sold them for money. However, Giselle should still have the documents and photos as they were invaluable.

"I can return them to you, but on one condition." Giselle admired her nails, which were recently manicured with diamonds.

Catherine frowned. "What is it?"

"Come with me," Giselle ordered.

"Where to?" Catherine couldn't see through her.

"Leave Hera. I'll open a new clinic in Jedburgh for you. You can become the family doctor of the Killian family too."

Giselle was trying to force Youngworth Miracle Clinic to shut down. Her plan was to win Catherine over and weaken Hera's influence in Jedburgh.

Rhett informed her that Hera's influence was the reason why Chad was going to restore Hera's status. The idea was to win Dr. Shadow over the Killians' side.

As long as Giselle could ruin Hera's reputation, Chad would relinquish the idea to restore Hera's status!

At the same time, with Catherine on her side, Giselle would be able to consolidate her position in the Killian family.

"No, I won't do that." Catherine shook her head.

She couldn't betray Hera.

"Why not? Your biological granddaughter is me! I'm your only family alive. Why are you helping an outsider but not me? Don't you feel guilty about my mother?" Giselle barked.

She continued, 'I'm your granddaughter, but you don't want to teach me medicine. Instead, you cultivate an outsider into a miraculous doctor! And now, you're helping her out. If Mom were still here, she wouldn't have just sit still and do nothing!'

Giselle knew that Catherine was an alternative medicinal practitioner before this but not the fact that she was the renowned Dr. Miracle! Catherine even cultivated Hera into a miracle doctor

If only Giselle hadn't been swapped back then, the titles of miracle doctor and Dr. Shadow would've belonged to her by now!

The more she thought about it, the more she was obsessed with the notion that Hera had stolen her life away

Chapter 474

The mention of her daughter made Catherine teary.Exclusive content

She explained, "Hera came this far solely because of her talent and effort. I taught her only the basics of alternative medicine, and she could figure out the rest herself. She's able to achieve success because of herself.

"When I brought you back to the mountains, I wanted to teach you medicine so that you could take over my career. But you didn't want to learn and left without a word-

"I don't care!" Giselle interrupted. 'If I hadn't been switched when I was young, I wouldn't have ended up like this. Hera stole all of my luck. Whatever honor she has right now is rightfully mine!

"She has stolen so many things away from me and now, she's trying to steal the status of Mrs. Killian from me! You're my biological grandmother. You shouldn't be helping her but me! If you don't, Mom won't be able to rest in peace up there."

Catherine gaped at her absurdity. If the two babies hadn't switched back then, Hera wouldn't have needed to suffer so much with Catherine either.

Catherine wiped her tears away. 'Do you know why your mother passed away? Have you visited your father?' "Why should I?" Giselle questioned back.

Giselle didn't see Catherine as someone important. In fact, she wouldn't have come to visit Catherine if it weren't for her medical skills. How could she be interested in meeting her father whom she hadn't met even once?

Her sole wish was to indulge in the Killians' wealth. She couldn't care less about her father, who was a murderer sentenced to life imprisonment.

Besides, her mother passed away due to a car crash. Giselle figured that that worked well for her. Who knew? Her mother might take Hera's side like Catherine would if she were still alive.

Catherine's heart sunk at that. She coldly ordered, 'Get out. I'll never go with you.'

Giselle thought she heard it wrongly. Previously, Catherine would always listen to her requests whenever she brought up her mother because she was Catherine's only family.

But today, Catherine told her off!

Giselle concluded in her head, "Hera must've brainwashed her."

"Do you still want my mom's documents and photos?" questioned Giselle icily.

Catherine's lips parted. Those were the only things she had about her daughter.

Noticing Catherine's hesitance, Giselle added, "I'll give you three days to think about it, Grandma. Leave Hera and come with me. Otherwise, I'll burn those things in front of her grave and tell her how you're treating her daughter. I bet you wish her to rest in peace, don't you?"

"Plus, even if you don't help me, I can take Hera down myself because I'm one of the Killians now. When that happens, don't blame me for not giving you a chance. You'd better think it through." Giselle then left with confident strides.

"You..." Catherine flopped onto the chair, crying.

Hera met up with Leon at Imperial Hotel. They entered the place together. A staff escorted them to a private room on the top floor.

Imperial Hotel comprised ten floors. The higher the floor, the more important the guests. Not anyone could go to the tenth floor; it was only accommodated to the Killian family.

The fact that Frederick invited them to a private room on the tenth floor proved his sincerity in the collaboration.

The waiter brewed a teapot of Earl Grey for them before pouring them a cup each. He informed politely, Please wait for a moment. Mr. Frederick will be here soon."

Then, he left the room.

"How should I address you later?" Leon drank the tea.

"Just introduce me as your assistant." Hera casually took out a book and a pen from her bag.

He almost spilled the tea. "Do you think he'll believe that?"

Dr. Shadow as his assistant?

Just who would believe such a feeble lie?

Chapter 475

"Who knows?" Hera began writing something in the book.

The content surprised Leon. 'Boss, is this D Language? Why is a top hacker reading such basic programming language?'

"Bernie is learning how to hack these days. I'm highlighting the important points for him. My notes can save him time," she explained.

"Have you told him your identity?" He became curious.

"No, I'm going to learn with him as a revision," she denied it.

"Revision? I expect nothing less from you, Boss. After learning these boring formulas, I'll never look back at them a second time." He gave her a thumbs up.

At that moment, someone opened the door from outside. Frederick entered with a bright smile.

But he lost his smile as soon as he saw Hera. "What are you doing here?"

Glancing at him indifferently, she wrote the last note before closing her notebook.

Leon alternated his gaze between them. "Do you know each other?"

He felt that he had asked a stupid question. Frederick was Bernard's nephew. It wouldn't be weird for them to have met each other before.

"She's my assistant," Leon introduced after Hera told him.

Leon was trying to come up with a reasonable explanation when Frederick suddenly let out a disdainful smile. "I expect nothing less from Raven. Even Dr. Shadow can only be his assistant's assistant."

Hera and Leon became speechless at his weird logic.

Frederick shifted his attention back to Leon, who was totally his type. When they shook hands, Frederick couldn't help but brush his fingertips against Leon's palm.

Frowning, Leon quickly withdrew his hand.

Hera noticed the nuance in his expression and gave him a questioning look.

He took out his phone and texted, This motherfucker sexually harassed me!

She looked at Frederick in surprise, not expecting that from him.

According to her knowledge, Frederick was currently dating a woman, though?

Ignoring their little interactions, Frederick commented about Hera's book implicitly, "Are you only studying D Language now? Mr. Kirkland, do you have such low standards for recruiting assistants?"

"To think that Raven's assistant's assistant is a beginner in programming. It'll be the joke of the universe if word gets out. Shouldn't you at least find someone who knows programming?"

Leon shouted inwardly, 'She is the Raven you're talking about!'

He said, "I think she's fit for the job."

"Don't let her looks deceive you. One should learn programming from a young age. Look at her. She's a girl, and she's picking it up only now. Even if she reads the whole book, she won't understand how to code. I think she's approaching you to fish for Raven's information."

Frederick continued, "My advice is to fire her immediately. Find someone more professional like me. I might not be a professional programmer, but I know the basics. If Raven is going to work with our company, I can be your assistant for free."

Not only Leon, but Hera also found this kind of appeal repulsive.

She coldly retorted, 'Are you applying for a job here?'

He coughed wryly. "I'm just reminding you to stay away from Raven as soon as possible. Even I am more capable than a beginner like you. Don't be a disgrace to Raven."

Chapter 476

"Oh, really?" Hera took her phone meaningfully. "I should buy you a welcome gift then. Raven's so unfortunate to have such a repulsive fan."

Frederick couldn't follow her words, and Leon was silently praying for this poor man.

"You-"

"Let's get down to business," interrupted Leon, worried that Hera might storm away if Frederick put his foot in his mouth again.

Frederick glared at Hera, blaming her for distracting him from business.

Suppressing his hatred, he ignored her and instead smiled at Leon. "Killian Corporation is willing to offer 30 million dollars plus 2% of profit to recruit Raven to develop the chip."

"Raven has conflicts with Miridian. Are you not afraid of that?" Leon asked implicitly.

"Are you talking about the warrant? It's not a big deal. We can help him settle it," replied Frederick languidly.

Hera, who was scrolling her phone, exchanged glances with Leon after hearing that.

Since Frederick wanted to collaborate with Raven, he would have done his research. The Killian family prioritized their reputation a lot, so why would he look for Raven while knowing he was involved in the conflict?

What was Frederick hiding?

"How should we deal with this?" Leon asked further.

In order to express his sincerity, Frederick repeated Rhett's words to convince Chad. "Miridian is trying to win Raven over with force."

Hera became speechless at that.

"What in the world? Are you serious?" Leon exclaimed.

Was his boss so powerful that Miridian became obsessed with her?

"If God Raven works with us, we will use our power in Miridian to revoke the warrant," Frederick promised confidently.

Leon wished the warrant would be revoked as soon as possible. Even he didn't dare to go online whenever he liked because of this. He was worried people would kidnap him just for Raven's location.

He shifted his gaze onto Hera, silently asking for her opinion.

"Only 30 million?" She sounded unimpressed as she kept looking at her phone.

Leon became helpless.

Frederick gritted his teeth, repeating, "And 2% of profit!"

The base offer of 30 million dollars was a considerable offer! In addition to that, there would be a long-term commission of 2% of the generated profit.

On top of that, Killian Corporation couldn't solely rely on Raven to develop the chip. They would invest billions for the initial development.

Meanwhile, Raven could make use of his expertise and ability at Killian Corporation with a long-term handsome income in return.

"Well, sounds like an unattractive offer to me. Your attitude is disgusting too. We won't accept the offer." She kept her phone and took her book, standing up. "Let's go to XS Corporation. Let's see how much they'll offer."

Frederick became all jumpy. "Who are you to decide for God Raven?" He faced Leon. "Mr. Kirkland, please convey our offer to God Raven."

"Her wish is my command." Leon rose from his seat and followed behind Hera.

Hera's wish was his command? Why would a superior listen to a mere assistant?

Frederick couldn't believe how passive Leon was Frustrated, Frederick regretted not asking for Raven's contact number earlier to speak to Raven directly. He shouldn't have wasted so much time on Raven's two assistants.

As she walked out of the door, Hera stopped to remind him, "Oh, don't forget to accept the welcome gift."

He rolled his eyes at her and stormed out of the room.

Along his way, many staff members threw a strange look at him. When he arrived on the first floor, other people continued looking at him. Some of them even began gushing while holding their phones.

His expression changed as he asked his assistant, "What's going on?"

Henry went to ask the employees around them. It wasn't long before he came back with hesitation.

The Novel will be updated first on this website. Come back and continue reading tomorrow, everyone!