

Chapter 291

She received a picture from Henry. In the picture, Shane held onto her arm as they walked into the hotel lobby.

"Ms. Joyner, what do you think your husband's reaction will be if he sees this?" Henry asked.

Sage chuckled. She thought that she would receive a warning from Giselle first. In the end, Henry was the first person who sought her out.

"What do you want to do?" Sage asked.

"Don't worry, Ms. Joyner. My lips are sealed tight. In addition, you're Layla's cousin. I would never run my mouth. Sending this picture to you is just a friendly reminder for you to be more careful in the future."

How could Sage be unaware of Henry's plans? He merely thought that her love for Ian had morphed into hatred and was doing this to get even. Henry also wanted to get something out of it. After all, he thought she was a dumb, rich, and naive girl he could easily swindle.

"Let's get coffee together when you're free." Sage offered.

Since Henry thought that he had gotten material to blackmail her, he expected that she would get closer to him. This made things easier to handle.

Unsurprisingly, Henry agreed swiftly. "Alright. I'll be busy for these few days. I'll invite you out when I'm free."

After she dealt with Henry, Sage contacted Priscilla. After she told Priscilla about the issue with the contract and her concerns, Priscilla fell silent for a moment.

After analyzing the situation, she said, "If the other party genuinely wants to set you up, it doesn't matter if the contract is airtight. They can still make a fuss over the shipment of goods or other aspects of it. There are too many loopholes when it comes to tarnishing one's reputation.

"Of course, as long as long as quality goods are handed over by the deadline given without any mishaps, there shouldn't be too big of a problem."

Priscilla continued, "Stop worrying about it. Just think positively. This is a huge project. As long as you complete it successfully, you'll get all the fame and profit you could ever need."

Sage couldn't disagree. However, her uncle tended to be overly ambitious. She needed to get a professional and reliable Vice President to assist him.

Sage thus asked Priscilla to help her find some suitable candidates. She would also bring it up to her grandfather so that he could also be on the lookout.

"Sage, have you fully recovered from being abducted by Benjamin?"

"I've already submitted the evidence to the police. The orphanage has also confirmed Benjamin's criminal activity. I've asked a lawyer about the whole thing, and he said that Benjamin would be sentenced to at least ten years imprisonment."

Benjamin deserved it. He hadn't cherished his family or career properly and did monstrous things in the name of charity.

After being exposed, not only did he refuse to repent for his crimes, but he even framed Priscilla in every way he could think of and tried to push the responsibility onto her.

"We've been married for ten years. I never expected that he would go this far." Then, Priscilla said hesitantly, "Ms. Joyner, I keep thinking that someone lured Benjamin into abducting you."

Sage didn't understand. "Why do you say this, Priscilla?"

"Benjamin does use dirty tricks and tends to blame his failure on others. However, he fears the strong and only bullies the weak."

Priscilla continued explaining her suspicions to Sage. "Last time, Benjamin had nearly been destroyed by Mr. Holcolm. He had made such an effort to get out of jail.

"According to that personality of his, he would've either found a way to solve the problem at the orphanage or begged Mr. Holcolm to let him go. How could he have had the guts to seek revenge on you?"

"In addition, you went to Colville. Even I hadn't known you were back. How did he know of your travel plans?"

Upon her words, Sage's expression changed. Indeed, her decision to go to her grandfather's house was a spontaneous one. How would Benjamin have known about it in advance and been able to set a trap?

"Of course, I'm just guessing. Perhaps he knew that he would suffer horribly and just wanted to vent his frustrations on you."

Sage replied, "No matter if Benjamin was lured into doing so, or if he was the one who committed those acts, he has to suffer the consequences of his actions.

"I'm mainly worried that someone is targeting you behind your back and that you won't take the necessary precautions in time.

"Benjamin harbors intense hatred toward us. Today, with this outcome, he won't be very helpful with any questions we ask. Sage, common risks shouldn't be what you fear. You should be extremely wary of unexpected mishaps. Stay safe out there."
