

342: Who Will He Choose?

When she saw Yosef, he gave her a slight nod, signaling that everything had been arranged.

The socialites in the crowd were still whispering among themselves. Some expressed sympathy for Madison's troubled marriage, while others suggested she confront Caitlin directly.

One of the socialites suggested, "Mrs. Jones, why not consult Master Han about your issues? You know, Master Han not only reads feng shui, but he also has a knack for solving family problems."

Madison raised an eyebrow skeptically. "Is that really true?"

"Of course! Last week, one of my good friends was on the brink of divorce, and she consulted Master Han for advice. He pinpointed the problem with such precision, and after following his guidance, not only did they not divorce, but her husband actually loves her more now!"

"Is he really that capable?" Madison asked, intrigued.

She had heard of Master Han before, and indeed, he was well-known for his expertise. It made sense that so many high-profile people sought him out for advice. If he could really help her fix her family problems, perhaps she should give him a try.

As she was mulling over this, Madison happened to notice Master Han walking through the crowd, seemingly stepping out to take a call. She took this opportunity to slip away and follow him.

Outside the hotel, after Master Han finished his call, Madison approached him politely.

"Master Han, hello."

Master Han gave her a quick glance. "You are Mrs. Jones?"

"Yes, that's me. Master Han, I hope I'm not interrupting, but I have a pressing matter to discuss with you. Could I take just a few minutes of your time?"

Master Han checked his watch and, after a brief pause, said, "Alright, since your grandfather and uncle are both my old friends, I'll spare a few minutes."

"Thank you so much!"

At this point, Master Han studied Madison carefully. Before she could even explain her situation, he furrowed his brow and asked, "Mrs. Jones, have you encountered some trouble lately? I can see from your face that you're in turmoil—there's a lot of negative energy around you. It looks like your marriage is in danger."

Madison was taken aback, almost on the verge of kneeling in awe.

"Master, you truly live up to your reputation. You're amazing! I've been having family problems, and my husband and I have been on the brink of divorce. We've been in a cold war for a long time. Can you please help me? Can you save my marriage?"

Madison trusted Master Han now and hoped he could give her the help she desperately needed.

"Since you're facing a divorce, I suggest you start by looking inward. Is it because your husband's work keeps him away so often that you've become suspicious and overly anxious?"

Madison hesitated, but then admitted, "That's part of it. I do feel insecure about my husband."

"Mrs. Jones, you should try to trust your husband. Trust and understanding are the foundation of marriage. Looking at your face, I can tell that you tend to be harsh and domineering, which brings misfortune to your marriage."

Madison's eyes widened. "You mean... my husband's life could be in danger?"

"Exactly. If you don't change your ways and learn to trust him, he might be seriously harmed, or worse, he could lose his life. Ultimately, your family could be destroyed."

Hearing this, Madison nearly broke into tears. She never wanted to harm her husband, let alone destroy her family.

As Master Han turned to leave, Madison grabbed his arm again. "Master Han, please, I'll change. I'll trust him and work on my behavior, but what if I change and he's still influenced by other women? What can I do then?"

"Are you referring to any specific woman?" Master Han asked calmly.

Madison couldn't hide her jealousy. "Someone like Caitlin. Very few men can resist her charm. She often seeks out my husband for business matters, and I find her annoying."

Master Han's expression grew more serious. "Caitlin? From what I know, she is protected by good fortune. Anyone who treats her well will be blessed with good luck and success, but those who harbor ill will toward her will suffer the consequences."

Madison frowned, but Master Han continued, "If Caitlin is the source of your troubles, then you need to resolve things with her. Clear the misunderstandings, seek her forgiveness, and show kindness. If your husband sees your sincerity and change, he'll return to your side. If you remain stubborn, well..."

Master Han shook his head, sighed, and walked back into the hotel.

Madison stood there, reflecting on his words. She was deeply moved by his insight. Was she really going to have to apologize to Caitlin and make amends to save her marriage? The thought of lowering herself to beg Caitlin for forgiveness was hard for her to stomach.

Back inside, she stood beside her husband, Felix, feeling uncomfortable as she noticed his cold demeanor. The event's host, a cheerful announcer, addressed the crowd.

"Ladies and gentlemen, esteemed guests, welcome to the KM International Group's inauguration ceremony for our new global CEO!"

Sebastian's speech was about to begin, and all eyes were on him as he walked onto the stage.

"Mr. Vanderbilt, please, take the stage and address the guests!"

The audience erupted into applause. Sebastian confidently walked up to the podium, his sharp eyes scanning the crowd before landing on Caitlin. He flashed her a charming smile, and the ladies in the audience swooned.

"Mr. Vanderbilt is too handsome!"

"Did he just smile at me?"

"No way! I think he was smiling at me!"

Zora and Caitlin were standing not far from each other. Zora could see that Sebastian's smile was directed at Caitlin. The man was indifferent to everyone, but with Caitlin, it was different.

Yasmin couldn't help but voice her displeasure to Madison. "Look at Caitlin, so shameless—flirting with Sebastian in public!"

"Enough!" Madison snapped, not knowing what had come over her. Usually, she would have enjoyed hearing bad things about Caitlin, but now, hearing Yasmin speak ill of her made Madison uncomfortable.

Yasmin was confused. What was going on? Why wasn't her sister-in-law reacting the way she usually did?

Sebastian began his speech, "Thank you all for attending today's KM International Group CEO inauguration ceremony. I'm honored to take on this role, and I believe, with our collective effort, KM International Group will soar to new heights!"

His motivating words were met with thunderous applause. After the speech, the ceremony moved into the ribbon-cutting segment.

Sebastian, along with his uncle Jasper and other key KM International Group leaders, cut the ribbon, and champagne flowed as they celebrated the occasion.

The room was filled with joy, and as Sebastian raised the microphone, he announced, "Next, I would like to invite someone to join me on stage for a small activity!"

At this moment, many women in the crowd grew excited. What kind of activity was Mr. Vanderbilt going to conduct, and who would he choose?
