Chapter 119

Clara realized that Yohan was referring to the previous night when he had called her crazy and suggested she go to the hospital.

Even though he didn't fully agree when she said she wasn't crazy, he still apologized.

"A proud man like him is willing to apologize; his character isn't bad," Clara thought, recognizing Yohan's positive trait. www.nOëlwôŘm.čôm

After Yohan left the pavilion, he didn't return to the house but continued walking alone. Clara took a photo of his back as he walked away.

A while later, she also left the pavilion and wandered around the backyard, taking more pictures as she went by.

"Ms. Fowler," Bruce called out as he approached her with two dogs on leashes, presumably out for a walk.

Seeing Bruce, Clara stopped. The two dogs, one white and the other brown, were adorable.

"Hey Bruce, walking the dogs?" she asked.

"Yeah, these are Mr. Morris's. But since Mr. Morris is too busy to care for them, we help look after them most of the time," Bruce explained.

Clara bent down to pet the dogs, who were very gentle and allowed her to stroke them.

"They're so cute! With Mr. Morris working so hard and coming home late, he probably doesn't have time to bond with his pets," Clara remarked. "I bet they're not very close to him." www.NOv(e)⓪wôŘ(m).CoM

Bruce chuckled, confirming her observation.

It was indeed more accurate to say that they were the ones taking care of the pets rather than Mr. Morris.

The pets weren't close to him, as he didn't have time to develop a relationship with them.

"I saw you taking pictures while walking around. Didn't Mr. Gardner tell you that you can't take photos here?" Bruce asked, concerned.

Clara paused for a moment before responding, "Is it not allowed? Why can't I take photos?"

Bruce explained, "Mr. Morris doesn't allow photos to be taken at his residence unless he gives permission. He's worried that someone might inadvertently expose his privacy."

"Even Mr. Potter and Ms. Smith have to follow this rule Mr. Gardner probably hasn't had the chance to tell you yet," he added.

Since moving in, Clara had been busy and rarely spent time in the main villa, so it was understandable that Mr. Gardner hadn't informed her.

"Oh, I didn't post anything online; it's just saved in my phone's album. I couldn't resist taking pictures of the beautiful garden in the backyard," Clara explained. "By the way, why didn't Mr. Morris say anything when he saw me taking pictures?"

Bruce paused for a moment, then laughed, "Oh, Mr. Morris didn't say anything when he saw you taking pictures! Then feel free to take them! Just forget what said; I'll walk the dogs now."

"He hadn't expected Mr. Morris to let Clara take pictures without saying a word. His leniency toward Clara was an exception. WwW.nOve/wôrm.(c)ôm

After Bruce walked away with the two dogs, Clara opened her photo album to review the pictures she had

Even if he hadn't said anything to her, she would be the first person he suspected if his privacy were ever exposed.

It was better to delete the photos to avoid unnecessary trouble.

Clara had taken quite a few pictures during her stroll, and although she was reluctant to delete them all at once, she began to enjoy the photos while deleting them.
