Chapter 376: Elizabeth's Foundation

She had always been in the palace, and even if Aurek had special methods of cultivation, she should have sensed something by now.

But this army seemed to have appeared out of nowhere...

"Your Highness,"

The voice of the contract spirit pulled her back from her thoughts.

"From what I see, it seems Crossbridge Empire's national fortunes are close to the Divine Empire level, and the only missing piece is the top-tier strong individuals. Should we..."

The spirit's words trailed off as she looked at Elizabeth, seeking her guidance.

Elizabeth pondered for a moment, the decisiveness of a former ruler once again shining through.

She slowly spoke, her voice clear and calm.

"The empire's national power is already substantial. It's time... to awaken Gwenhifal."

The contract spirit's eyes flashed with understanding, and her figure turned into starlight, vanishing.

Elizabeth slowly turned, her gaze piercing through the palace corridor toward the direction of the empire's core, her mind filled with thoughts.

Aurek, however, was not concerned with the secretive nature of White Lady's invitation at this moment. The war in the Abyss Demon Realm was his primary focus.

After successfully seizing two provinces of the Dawonru Empire, he could clearly feel the empire's national power growing stronger.

The emperor's phantom in the sky above the capital had also solidified further.

This meant that not only could unifying the Eura continent enhance the empire's fortune, but expanding territories and conquering other realms could also contribute!

If he could gradually take control of the entire Dawonru Empire, the empire's national power would surge to unimaginable heights.

At that point, not only would he be able to mobilize the full power of the empire, but all the vassals granted royal grace would also see their national fortune rise significantly.

He might even be able to project part of the empire's power onto the battlefield in the Abyss Demon Realm!

At that time, even if the Dawonru Empire deployed a Sage King-level powerhouse beyond a God King, he would still be able to strike them down on the demon realm's soil!

Therefore, in addition to controlling the Aetherian Sanctuary, the war in the demon realm was his top priority.

As he was lost in thought, Elizabeth arrived outside his chambers.

She was followed by several trusted subordinates she had cultivated during her time in the Selene Empire.

"Your Majesty,"

She gracefully bowed, her manners impeccable.

"What is it?"

Aurek looked at her.

This woman had indeed subdued much of her sharpness, but the deep-rooted authority and pride in her could not be fully hidden.

However, this was hardly surprising.

She had ruled the Selene Empire for over thirty years, and she had long since cultivated the aura of supremacy.

Given her ability to command a True God-level contract spirit, her status in the so-called upper realms was likely far from ordinary, and she probably ruled over a powerful kingdom herself.

After all, if she could command a True God-level contract spirit, her background was undoubtedly formidable.

Yet, no matter what her status had been, she was now merely a consort in the Crossbridge Empire palace.

From the moment she decided to step into this palace, she could no longer escape this identity or her fate.

Elizabeth spoke calmly.

"I have heard that the war in the Abyss Demon Realm is at a stalemate. I would like to recommend a God King-level powerhouse to go to the Demon Realm to assist the empire's forces on the frontlines."

Aurek's brow arched, and he gazed intently at Elizabeth.

She could even summon a God King-level powerhouse?

It seemed that her background was even deeper than he had expected.

But Aurek had no time to delve into her origins at the moment.

According to Tina's reports, the Dawonru Empire had escalated the war status to an equal-level national war and was mobilizing its true strength.

This would undoubtedly put immense pressure on the frontlines.

If a God King-level powerhouse could be brought to the battlefield now, combined with the one million God General-level troops already deployed, it would ensure that Crossbridge Empire could solidify its position in the demon realm and gain valuable time for consolidation and growth.

At that point, he could continue to accumulate more God General-level troops and accelerate the training of key generals like Suggwoth.

Eventually, once he fully controlled the Aetherian Sanctuary, he could even consider leading the charge personally!

However, for now, the main objective was still to stabilize the Secondary Demon Realm and the two provinces, with a focus on establishing a strong foothold.

Another important consideration was to avoid drawing the attention of powerful entities like the Council of the Dark Order in the demon realm too early.

Once the empire displayed signs of absorbing the Dawonru Empire, it would inevitably attract the attention of ancient beings.

Aurek placed his hands behind his back, his sleeves gently swaying.

"Fine, arrange for her to go to the Demon Realm."

"Yes,"

Elizabeth replied.

She hesitated for a moment before adding,

"There are many independent powerhouses in the demon realm. Your Majesty may want to consider utilizing some resources to recruit them."

"They are familiar with the demon realm's situation and should be able to assist the empire effectively."

"I have my own considerations."

Aurek had already thought about this.

For independent powerhouses like Gersent, who pursued personal interests, the empire would need to present enough tempting potential and a promising future to recruit them.

If they saw no clear hope, why would they risk serving the Crossbridge Empire instead of joining Dawonru or Demonwing Empire?

...

Abyss Demon Realm.

The empire's forces had established a much firmer defense in Sapphire Dominion and Demonbone Dominion.

Over eight hundred thousand Frostbound Warlocks personally oversaw operations, using thunderous methods to cleanse the remaining Dawonru Empire officials and rebel forces in the two provinces.

The powerful pressure forced General Stellan and Deputy Minister Sherman to abandon the effort to reclaim lost territories and retreat their remaining forces to the Bronze Fortress, located adjacent to Sapphire Dominion, forming a new standoff with the empire's forces.

At the borders of the Bronze Fortress,

Two God King-level experts from Dawonru Empire's Heavenly Province furrowed their brows.

One of them, an elderly man dressed in immaculate imperial military attire with white hair and eagle-like eyes, spoke in a low voice.

His voice was rough from years of battle.

"I must personally go to the frontlines of Sapphire Dominion. To fight this war without even understanding the enemy's true strength—what kind of foolish battle is this?"

He was the veteran general Barton,

Former Vice Minister of the Military Department, later reassigned to Heavenly Province to oversee the core legions, highly respected.

The other was a wise old man dressed in deep purple scholar robes.

He was Duke, a former mentor from the Empire's Research Institute, now living in retirement in the Heavenly Province.

He was also Stellan's mentor.

The arrival of these two God King-level powerhouses signaled that Dawonru Empire's counterattack was about to enter a new and more brutal phase.

"Your Excellencies!"

Sherman respectfully bowed.

"It's not that the Military Department didn't investigate thoroughly, but the enemy is far more cunning than we imagined!"

"Previously, the four-winged Demons... our soldiers repeatedly ordered investigations into Crossbridge Empire's true strength, but every time, Crossbridge Empire hid their core power!"

"The result is that when we thought their army's limit was Grand Divine Cleric, they pulled out a God General-level legion!"

Stellan spoke up beside him,

"Grand Demon Emperor Hankley has already devised a battle plan, and the empire's guard army has been mobilized from the Silver Demon Palace."

"All war resources are being mobilized, just waiting for the Grand Demon Emperor's final orders!"
