Chapter 1816: Generosity As High As A Mountain.

Not even the gods waiting in the other room noticed when golden light appeared and destroyed the altar. There wasn't even a second delay between Crystal Hoard dying and her altar getting destroyed.

One of the gods said, "This is not a weapon. It is light that is golden."

Meanwhile, in the mortal realm. The god king had just warned Legion-1 when the golden spear returned to his hands. Even before 9 Crowns taunted them, they had paused and then run away.

Legion-1 sneered at them. He thought to himself, "You think because you are allies you are clones too?"

The only reason Legion had been able to catch golden light was because it was delayed. It didn't return immediately to the mortal realm after destroying Legion-1 and their altar because it wanted to kill the other clones too. Unfortunately, it couldn't attack them from within anymore, so they were able to capture it.

This is why he was confident to use golden light to resist. Even if it didn't work, he would simply use his backup plan, which is to allow the other clones to help him.

The contract said they couldn't help 9 Crowns unless they were attacked. It also didn't say they couldn't defend themselves. Legion-2 made sure that they could defend themselves, which means they could help him. After all, they are 9 Crowns too.

Their angel had assured them that they wouldn't be breaking the contract if the other clones, decided to help him. The only adverse effect would be that it would clue others to their abnormality. Their secret of being the same person might come out.

But now it seems he was worried for nothing. He alone will be able to take care of these gods.

He gave chase immediately and began killing them one after the other. He would throw golden light out, and they would die from one hit. This is because golden light has been upgraded again.

(Name: Golden Light)

(Type: God-Killing Authority Weapon)

(Tier 5 (Evolvable): 0/1,000,000,000)

(Attack Power: 100% of Authority +10% of Total Divinity)

(Ability: Destroys the body, avatar, and altar of a god as long as a target dies to this weapon.)

(Description: This is a weapon for killing gods. If you can kill a god once with this weapon, you don't need to fight them again to kill them again.)

They had upgraded it from Tier 3 to Tier 5. So its power has increased from 70% of Authority to 100% and 10% of their total divinity. They have Crystal Hoard and her allies to thank for this.

It cost them 100,000 and 1,000,000 million divinity to bring it to Tier 5. Golden Light can now use 100% of his Authority which is currently 11,000, and 10% of his total divinity, which is 1,000, for a sum of 12,000 in attack power.

Their enemies, on the other hand, can only use 20% of their Authority to defend. Yet, they gave Legion 5,500,000 divinity to strengthen themselves. It is indisputable that the generosity of these god kings is the highest Legion has ever encountered.

Legion is humble enough to admit that they can never match up to them in terms of generosity. The only thing they can do is make sure that this generosity does not go to waste. They have to make sure that they use golden light to its fullest potential. That's why he mustn't let any of his enemies go. It would be shameful to let any of his enemies go after he has been blessed so much. Killing his enemies is literally the one thing he has to do. He mustn't fail at it.

Fortunately, it is pretty easy work. Crystal Hoard's effective defense with Divine Shield was at 5,200 and she is the god with the highest Authority. If she couldn't take on one attack, then the rest of them can't.

Things might have been different in the divine realm since they could use the endurance of their divine body to resist too. But they are only here in the form of their avatars. They are doomed to die.

The gods were not stupid. They realized this fact and ran in different directions so that he wouldn't be able to kill all of them. Then they canceled their avatars. It would take one second for their avatars to dissipate. It is slow, but it is enough for many of them to survive.

Legion-1 is not stupid either. He only chased the gods who ran in the direction they came from. He wasn't disappointed when they cancelled their avatars. He simply continued in the direction they came from. After all, that's the direction that their Oracles are in.

The gods saw this and sent messages to their Oracles to scatter. Only Crystal Hoard's one remaining Oracle didn't receive any warning from her God. After all, her God was currently indisposed. But he too ran when he saw the other Oracles fleeing for their lives.

Unfortunately, it was too late for them. Legion-1's other backup plans had kicked into action. His subordinate gods from the Apocalypse Pantheon had surrounded the Oracles and were killing them.

Legion-1 didn't make the gods come directly toward him just to keep them together so that he could attack them together. He could have let them scatter and then hunted them separately.

That way, even if Golden Light didn't work, he and his Pantheon would have been able to overwhelm their avatars. But what benefit would killing their avatars bring?

Even if Golden Light worked, the best he would have gained from killing their avatars is delaying their resurrection. That isn't good enough for him. What he wants are their Oracles. So he already planned to eliminate the Oracles no matter the cost.

Even if golden light had failed and the help of his clones hadn't turned the tide, his pantheon would still surround and attack their Oracles. That way he would ensure that they lost something in this attack.

Chapter 1817: Cutting Loses.

The 18 gods resisted by possessing their Oracles to defend. The gods from their six pantheons combined also descended to their altars with their avatars to help them resist and escort their Oracles to safety.

200 gods from the alliance of gods fought against 50 gods from the Apocalypse pantheon. It looked like the 200 gods were going to win, however, the initiative had already been lost when they invaded the enemy's home ground, failed to neutralize golden light and got themselves surrounded.

The tide of battle changed as soon as Legion-1 arrived with golden light. The gods stopped possessing their Oracles and some avatars even gave up immediately. They stopped helping and quickly returned to the divine realm so that they won't be killed by that weapon and run the risk of losing access to God's Domain forever.

As for the ones that remained, one strike destroyed every resistance in his way. Legion-1 worked his way to the Oracles through the hoards of gods protecting them and killed them.

He didn't destroy the altars that their Oracles had erected so that the gods could descend to it with their avatars and fight him. But none of the 18 god did that despite the lives of their Oracles being at stake.

It is because that only meant that they would die too. That would worsen the situation after their Oracle dies. They were not willing to assist as avatars or to possess their oracles so as to limit their losses after their Oracles die.

It was a smart plan to cut their losses, but the damage had already been done. They didn't lose any divinity, as the divine orb of those who were killed by Golden Light is still there waiting for them. What they lost was merely some divine energy, their expensive divine altars, and finally their very important Oracles.

That last part was especially painful. They felt the pain their Oracles experienced just before they died. As if that wasn't enough, they also received a notification from the world to inform them of the unnatural passing of their Oracles.

It was so bad that they didn't try to attack 9 Crowns again. If they hadn't lost their Oracles, then they could have gathered again and began planning for another attempt on 9 Crown. But now no one dares to do so.

They didn't even want to think about it. 18 Oracles were lost just like that. Legion-1 didn't let them go. He sent gods to chase the ones that escaped the siege. He chased them for miles and finally killed them.

It could have been worse had they brought more Oracles. Things were already bad, but they didn't have someone to blame for this disastrous affair because Crystal Hoard was no more. She had lost both her Oracles and her divine altar, so she couldn't even resurrect anymore.

It was truly sad that her last Oracle had died when both she and her divine altar were gone. This meant that both her link to the mortal and divine realms were gone. It meant that her link to God's Domain was severed, and they couldn't find her to blame her.

The proof is that her name has disappeared from the ranking list and someone else has taken her place at the top of the ranking. Even her Pantheon had disbanded. What is left of her is her divine orb with 5,000 divinity in it and her debt of 5 domains to the orc Bandits.

The god kings were angry, but their anger combined couldn't compare to that of Crystal Hoard's. At first she was in shock. Her large body in the void universe stood still with her jaws dropped in shock and disbelief.

Then she was in denial. She couldn't believe that her plan had failed. She shook her head and tried to connect to the pillar beside her. Her divine sense made contact with it and successfully connected with the world beyond it, but then she was repelled.

"No, no, no. This can't be happening. This must be a mistake."

She turned to the side to ask her angel, "But you said it should work. You said if 9 Crowns was able to capture the weapon, 100 gods should be able to with 100% certainty."

But there was no angel when she turned to the side. She realized then that there would never be an angel ever again because she had lost access to God's Domain. This made her very angry. She roared in anger and anguish. Then she blamed 9 Crowns. "It is all his fault. He stole my weapon. He killed my Oracle. He must be punished."

That was easier said than done. She doesn't know 9 Crowns in the void universe. If she didn't get access to God's Domain she would have never encountered him. Her only hope for revenge is to have others with access to God's Domain help her.

It was a good idea. She liked it, and it was feasible because she knew a lot of people with access to God's Domain. She was about to contact them to help her when she realized that doing so would also inform the world god who gave her the slot that she had lost access to God's Domain.

This realization made her shiver in fear. It also doused her enthusiasm. She didn't think it was a good idea to tell others that she had lost access just yet.

But she knew that the information couldn't be hidden. Her disappearance would be noticed and the world god informed. Things would become worse then. So it is better to tell the truth now.

She said to herself, "His excellency might be able to help me get new access. Things might work out."

She doesn't really believe that, but it helped her to summon the courage needed to tell the world god who spent a lot of resources so that she could get the Authority of the void universe that she wouldn't be able to get the Authority of the void universe and that the resources they spent have gone to waste.
