

Hammer God 583

Chapter 583 Space

On their way down, they found a couple more chunks. Some of these were so hard that Kyle needed hours to deal with them.

Of course, they could've just gone around them, but Kyle was interested in these kinds of materials.

At some point in the future, he also wanted to learn the Level Three Law of Metal, and these chunks would help him.

Additionally, metals were always useful.

They made weapons, machines, and buildings. On top of that, they could be used to comprehend the Law of Metal and could even be turned into Neutral Energy.

When Kyle reached a depth of 70 kilometers, he expected a stream of Yin-Wind, but there was no stream.

The stream of Yin-Wind in the Tertiary World was there to isolate the World Wall and to create more Yin-Elements.

The planets in the Supreme World didn't all have Yin-Wind.

There were other ways to create the Yin-Elements.

These planets were actual planets.

However, since not all of physics in the Supreme World worked like physics on Earth, there were a couple of differences.

For example, if one dug deep into the ground on Earth, the pressure would increase, but gravity would decrease.

One would think that gravity would increase since one essentially got closer to the source of gravity. After all, gravity felt stronger on the surface of Earth than at a height of 1,000 kilometers.

But in truth, every bit of matter had a gravitational pull.

If one were inside the core of the Earth, one would be pulled in all directions since about an equal mass of matter would be in all directions. The gravitational pulls would essentially cancel each other out.

But in the Supreme World, gravity worked via a Law based on Gravity Energy.

Gravity Energy was condensed in the cores of the planets, and the Gravity Energy inside the cores was the reason for gravity's effect.

The more Gravity Energy there was, the stronger the pull became.

"This should be enough," Warp Space said after they had reached a depth of around 200 kilometers.

"Huh, already?" Kyle asked. "We can keep going, you know?"

Warp Space smiled bitterly. "You can. I can't."

"What do you mean?" Kyle asked.

A bit of sweat appeared on Warp Space's forehead. "It's... not easy to stay here."

Kyle just became even more confused.

What the fuck was she talking about?

"I don't have the Law of Body," Warp Space said. "The pressure... is not light."

"Huh," Kyle uttered as he looked around. "Now that you say it, it does feel a bit cramped. "

Warp Space could only smile when she heard Kyle calling the intense pressure cramped.

A room could be considered cramped. Sure, a full room could feel a bit oppressive, but that couldn't be compared to this level of pressure.

To her, it felt more like a mountain was on top of her shoulders.

"This is good enough. Thank you for escorting me," Warp Space said.

Kyle nodded. "Sure thing! I'll be heading out, then. Not sure when or where we meet the first team, but expect to be called to battle soon. We've already gone through some shit, but we're technically still a white team."

"That's fine," Warp Space said with difficulty. "I can train on almost any planet."

Sadly, the emblem couldn't teleport people back to where it had summoned them from.

When the team was called to battle, assuming they survived, the members had to go back to their previous locations manually.

"Sure thing," Kyle said. "Anyway, gotta go. I have to look at some really hard and heavy wind."

"I wish you success," Warp Space said.

"You too," Kyle said with a quick wave before bursting through the stone above him.

After a couple of minutes, Kyle reached the surface again. The way back was much faster since he wasn't distracted by fancy stones- sorry, minerals.

When he reached the surface, Kyle used all of his power and jumped upward.

He quickly started to slow down, but he just used his Law of Wind to gather a ton of air beneath his feet before jumping again.

This was quite Energy-efficient, but it only worked for a couple of jumps.

The air became less dense, which meant Kyle needed more Energy to gather footholds.

Eventually, he switched to simply using his Meteor Energy.

In the beginning, his Energy was dropping quickly after switching to using Meteor Energy, but it reduced with distance to the planet.

At some point, Kyle's Energy reserves fell to 30%, but that was his lowest point.

Afterwards, his Energy consumption was equal to his regeneration, and moments later, he started recovering more Energy than he was using.

His speed also increased drastically.

'Alright, got out of the bad part,' Kyle thought. '30%. Without my Law of Body, this wouldn't have been easy, but I think I would have still succeeded.'

Kyle pulled out his emblem and activated one of its functions.

The next moment, two small beams of light came out of it.

One of them was pointing to the planet, while another one was pointing forward.

Naturally, this function could tell the owner where their teammates were.

Kyle changed his direction a slight bit and continued.

Finally, about a minute later, he spotted Swamp Dragon.

As expected, he was alone in space, waiting for Kyle.

Kyle reached Swamp Dragon and grabbed his arm before pulling him forward.

"Here I am!" he transmitted. "Let me do the walking."

As long as they were in physical contact, they could easily send Voice Transmissions.

"Did everything work out?" Swamp Dragon asked.

"Yep, she's comprehending her warped space or whatever she wants to comprehend," Kyle transmitted back as he looked at the countless planets in space.

When Swamp Dragon heard the way Kyle had worded his statement, his eyes narrowed slightly.

"You've noticed as well?" Swamp Dragon asked.

"What exactly?" Kyle asked, still searching for a planet.

"I believe she wasn't entirely honest," Swamp Dragon transmitted.

"Oh, that! Yeah, I noticed," Kyle said. "She probably has an artificial Gravity Affinity. At least, that's my guess. You noticed as well?"

Swamp Dragon nodded. "I've got a feeling, and these feelings are rarely incorrect."

"Is it because of your Karmic Blessing?" Kyle asked.

"Yes," Swamp Dragon answered.

The first time Kyle had seen Swamp Dragon, he had already noticed...

Swamp Dragon...

Had a whole lot of Karmic Luck.

And that came with benefits.
