Isabella's cleverness came into play when she skillfully prevented the bodyguard from purchasing soup for Seth. Choosing a meal that demanded minimal assistance, she deftly avoided the responsibility of personally feeding him.

Observing Seth's lackluster appetite and perpetual discontent during meals, it seemed as though eating was a burdensome task for him.

Undeterred by this, Isabella refrained from excessive fuss and only offered assistance when necessary, steadfastly avoiding the act of feeding him directly.

In the end, Seth threw down his spoon and refused to eat.

A hush settled over the room as the clock approached nine o'clock.

Recognizing the hour, Isabella rose from her seat, contemplating that it was time for her to leave.

"Quarterly plans should be ready in advance. You can't even handle such a simple task?" Seth opened his eyes.

Isabella was at a loss for words. "Then should I..."

Seth said, "Work on it here. Show me when it's done."

When the boss demanded overtime, there was no way to refuse.

Isabella rubbed her eyes, picked up her notebook, and sat on the edge of the bed,

The advertising department was in a rush, and she was concerned that Briana might change her mind, so she scheduled the shoot for that day.

It was just a few shots for the advertisement, so it wouldn't take too long.

Arriving at the studio for the morning shoot at nine o'clock, all the staff were in attendance, but Briana had not yet made an appearance.

"Isn't she being unprofessional? Just a few shots for 3 million dollars. What more does she want?" someone whispered as Isabella entered.

Without saying much, Isabella promptly dialed Jessica.

Seth's surprisingly cooperative attitude throughout the entire event pleased Spencer.

He understood that Seth had always been composed and level-headed, making it impossible for him to lose his composure over Isabella.

Bloom sat with Ariana, both casting intense glares at Seth, their eyes practically shooting fire.

This b*stard! We have an agreement! Why is he changing his mind?

“Isabella?” Ariana suddenly whispered.

“What’s wrong with you, Bloom?”

Bloom wanted to speak but was fiercely glared at by Noreen.

Noreen originally wanted to put down the phone, but then her eyes caught the word on the screen.

The men at the table were originally focused on Seth. Upon hearing the words, their attention was also drawn over.

Taking out their phones, they quickly read through the situation and got a rough idea of what happened.

The men were not interested in such trivial matters, but Noreen and Ariana’s mother, Debbie Alonso, loved gossip. After all, it was also a bit of a scandal.

“At least she’s an executive director. How can she act so recklessly?”

“Coming from a humble background, it’s normal for her to seek fame,” Christina pass a dish to Spencer, shooting a sarcastic look at Seth. “Wasn’t this girl once Seth’s chief secretary?”

Noreen casually remarked, "That's true. How could our children possibly want to

The ambiance at the table was peculiar, with Max and Ariana's father, Jack Years, eager to continue discussing the recent stock market with Seth, but Seth was not very forthcoming.

"Acting in movies is quite appealing as well." Bloom pursed her lips and remarked, "I used to watch Madam Baxter's movies too."

Noreen shot her a glance and chuckled, "Indeed, she is the movie queen, unmatched by

"If Seth were to make his debut in movies, he would surely gain popularity as well."

Bloom raised her eyebrows and glanced at Seth. She doubted that Seth could remain.

"Nonsense, Seth in movies? That's impossible!" Noreen scolded.

Bloom pursed her lips and tried to signal Seth with her eyes, hoping he would be of

However, Seth remained composed, seemingly unfazed by Isabella and Erin being looked down upon by the others.

Ariana stood up, poured wine for everyone, and approached Seth.

Yet, Seth moved the wine glass away, deliberately avoiding her gesture.

Ariana hesitated for a moment and withdrew her hand.

“I just finished filming today,” Seth announced.

An instant hush fell over the table.

“Then it’s an interview, right?” Noreen attempted to diffuse the tension.

Seth replied, “It’s a formal advertisement. I filmed it with Isabella.”

Noreen’s expression stiffened.

Bloom bit her fork, her eyes wide with surprise.

Spencer snapped his fork down, “Well, regarding this matter...”

At nine o'clock, Isabella returned to the company with a sense of urgency, promptly instructing the advertising department to work overtime.

“Miss Symons, didn't you say we weren't going to release it?”

Isabella, maintaining her composure, directed, “Find two young models, a male and a female, with body types similar to mine and Mr. Shaffer's, and bring the editor as well.”

“Yes,”

An hour later, the preparations were complete.

“Miss Symons, are we going to release it?”

“Yes, go ahead and release it.”

“Understood.”

The advertisement showcased only a handful of shots. Isabella replaced all shots featuring her and Seth’s faces with two young models, keeping those solely with their backs.

Although some people managed to recognize Isabella from behind, any confusion was swiftly dispelled by the model's explanation on Twitter.

'My foot is injured, so I can't run. I apologize for any inconvenience, Miss Symons~'

As an executive director, Isabella indeed assumed the role of a D-class model substitute. The critical factor here was that Isabella maintained a top-notch figure an appearance.

Netizens, renowned for their sharp critique, initially regarded Isabella replacing Briana as a jest. However, after viewing the advertisement, the tide of comments swiftly changed.

Isabella casually scrolled through the comments, paying minimal attention to most of them but honing in on a select few.

Seated beside her, Phoebe remarked, “Some people mention that the backs of the ma

The realization struck Isabella; it was her and Seth in that single shot, both facing away.

“Actually, there’s no need to completely erase Mr. Shaffer, not even the actors’ names in the advertisement,” Phoebe suggested.

She had expected the issue to be resolved that day, even planning to apologize to Isabella, but an unexpected evening summons to the office disrupted her plans.
