

Chapter 70 A flower in your path

Hercules, filled with fury and despair, is consumed by overwhelming rage. He walks through the dark woods, his footsteps echoing like thunder as his evil presence contaminates everything around him. The air becomes heavy and the leaves on the trees murmur in agony under its power.

As his rage grows, he begins to channel his dark energy against the innocent life he encounters along the way. Helpless creatures flee in panic as he pursues them, turning their pain and rejection into a rampage of destruction.

Hercules raises his hands and dark lightning materializes, hurling himself at any animal that dares to cross his path. Trees are blackened and reduced to ash, while the ground shakes under the weight of your unbridled rage.

As he watches the devastation around him, Hercules comes across a small clearing, where a delicate flower shimmers shyly in the dim sunlight. The contrast between its darkness and the fragility of the flower is remarkable.

He approaches with heavy steps, staring at the flower with a mixture of contempt and fascination. His evil power tries to envelop the little creation of nature, but something stops him. A gentle breeze seems to caress the flower, protecting it from imminent destruction.

Hercules is paralyzed, observing the delicacy of that flower. In a moment of clarity, he realizes that for all the power he craved, this simple flower, so fragile and vulnerable, has a beauty he could never comprehend.

Compassion and hope shine in the eyes of Hercules for a brief moment. He contemplates what might have been had he chosen a different path. Sadness mixes with his anger and he lets out a scream of frustration and anguish, a scream that echoes throughout the forest, stirring the leaves and startling the remaining animals.

But in spite of all his fury, Hercules knows it's too late to turn back. The light that once existed in his heart has been corrupted by power and the thirst for revenge. Eduarda's rejection was just another reminder of her loss.

With one last look full of sadness and bitterness, Hercules walks away from the flower, leaving it behind in the devastated clearing. He disappears into the darkness of the forest, lost in his own pain and despair.

Meanwhile, Eduarda and Erick prepare to face Hercules, aware of the danger he represents. United by love and determination, they face the battle with courage, vowing to protect the light and innocence that still remains in the world, no matter what challenges await them.

Hercules, lost in his own abyss of darkness, realizes that Eduarda is like that little flower in the clearing. A flame of light he cannot extinguish. Deep in his corrupted soul, he feels a remnant of the love and connection they shared in the past.

However, Hercules also know that there is no turning back. The thirst for power and revenge that consumes him is insatiable. He is willing to achieve victory in this war, no matter what the cost. He is willing to spread darkness and pain throughout the world, even if it means breaking his feelings for Eduarda and killing her if necessary.

Cloaked in his grim resolve, Hercules plunges into intense training. He hones his skills, delving deeper and deeper into the darkness to gain unimaginable powers. Your mind becomes a furnace of cruel strategies and Machiavellian plans.

Meanwhile, Eduarda and Erick prepare for the imminent confrontation. They know that the battle will be intense and that Hercules will be a formidable enemy. United by light and true love, they train together, strengthening their bonds and honing their skills.

As the war approaches, Eduarda feels a deep sadness in her heart. She mourns the loss of Hercules, the transformation of his former friend into such a sinister figure. But she understands that she needs to protect all that's good in the world, even if it means face and defeat the one who was once part of her life.

and followers loyal to their wicked cause. He summons them with a sinister smile on his lips, his mind ablaze with an evil plan.

Hercules knows that to achieve his goal, he needs to separate Eduarda from Erick, his only weak point. He devises a strategy that involves dispersing his evil forces to engage the defenders of light in a chaotic battle, while he himself seeks to find and face Eduarda alone.

Meanwhile, Eduarda and Erick prepare for the final battle, confident in their love and determination. They know the risks they face, but they are willing to fight to the end to protect everything they love.

Eduarda and Erick summon all their allies for a special dinner, with the aim of promoting unity and strengthening the group before the final battle that approaches. They know that it is crucial to gather all the forces of light and peace to face the dark army of Hercules.
