Chapter 159

Currently, besides recruiting staff for a major game development team, "Panzer Saga" was also being upgraded, with "Panzer Saga 2" being set for release soon. The app for Jack's second minigame had already been approved and was about to be launched.

Amid the chaos, Jack also needed to write the background story for one of his major games, "Legend of the East". He knew very well that a game needed to have a background story that could lure its audience in if it wanted success-this was important so that it could keep the audience hooked.

If a game could garner plenty of attention based on its printed advertisements even prior to the launch, its sales would be largely boosted.

Jack had a tough mission ahead of him, but he relied on his highly developed mind and extraordinary mental strength to barely maintain peak efficiency—he turned the impossible into reality.

He didn't even participate in the meet and greet session after telling Felix he was leaving. He removed his mask and changed his clothes before blending with the crowd and leaving the hall. He left the stadium like he was a regular audience member.

He'd always worn a mask during his performances, so no one recognized him with it off. When he got to the stadium's entrance, he saw it was chock-full of waiting fans. Many people held banners that said things like "Soul, I love you" or "I'm your fan, Soul", and their necks were stretched as they waited for him to appear.

It turned out word had gotten out that he would leave from this entrance. So, his fans had gathered there to wait for him, wanting to get his autograph.

Jack was surprised to see Feena among the crowd. Seth and Luca weren't with her-perhaps they weren't interested in star-chasing.

Amelia stood not too far away from her and looked around excitedly. Alex was beside her, looking impatient.

Just then, Feena saw Jack. Surprisingly, she took the initiative to speak to him. "Is that you, Jack? Why didn't you come with us if you were here for the concert?"

He didn't answer her. Instead, he asked, "What are you doing here? Why aren't you at the meet and greet to get Soul's autograph?"

She said a little shyly, "There was a last-minute announcement that he wasn't participating in the meet and greet. That's why I'm waiting here for him to come out."

She'd always been Soul's die-hard fan and was desperate for an autograph. She scanned Jack as she spoke, but he looked so composed that she couldn't tell whether anything was up.

He asked in surprise, "Can't you go inside to catch him?"

She gave him a profound look before sighing. "I'd love to do that, but the organizers told us that he's made a run for it. That's why I'm here to try to catch him."

At that moment, Amelia noticed Jack and Feena talking to each other. She didn't say anything to Jack, though.

Alex saw them, too. He snarled, "Fuck, what bad luck. Why do we run into bastards like him wherever we go?"

Amelia was worried he would get into a fight with Jack, so she hurriedly tugged on his shirt to tell him to stop.

Jack heard Alex's words, but he didn't want to lose his composure over something like this. Besides, he had plenty to do. He chose to ignore Alex.

Unfortunately, Alex became more obnoxious when Jack didn't say anything. He thought the latter was afraid of him, so he pointed at Jack and asked Amelia, "What? Are you upset because I'm talking about your ex like this?

"Look at how he doesn't even dare to look at me despite someone insulting him— it's clear he's a coward and a loser! I honestly don't know how you were blind enough to fall for someone like him!"

His unfiltered insults attracted everyone's attention, and Amelia turned red. "Can you put a lid on it, Alex? Don't you know how embarrassing this is?"

He seemed unfazed. "What do I have to be embarrassed about? I'm much better than that loser. I'd slap him right now if there weren't so many people around!"
